The Council of the Celtic Society having intrusted me with the superintendence of this volume in its progress through the Press, I hereby certify that it is, in all respects, conformable to the rules of the Society. I also take this opportunity of expressing, upon the part of the Council, their thanks to the Royal Irish Academy, for the permission to print this work from their most valuable MSS. ; to the Provost and Board of Trinity College, for access to their Manuscript Library ; and to the Rev. Doctor Todd, for facilities in the consultation of it which he was kind enough to afford. To John O'Donovan, Esq., our thanks are pre-eminently due, for the learning and zeal which he has exhibited in the editing and general arrangement of the work. In it will be recognized a further proof of the critical and profound knowledge which he possesses of the language of our country, as well as of its topography and history. The services of Mr. Eugene Curry have been invaluable, and I am happy to record that his intimate knowledge of our ancient literature has throughout the work been made available.

I cannot close these observations without tendering our warm gratitude to the distinguished artist, Frederick W. Burton, Esq., R. H. A., whose pencil has graced our title-page with a group as classic as it is Irish, and which cannot fail to excite, in every Irish mind, true feelings of pride and satisfaction. It is to George Du Noyer, Esq., that we owe the drawings of the ancient chess-king from the cabinet of Dr. Petrie, which will be found in our Introduction ; and to Mr. Hanlon we are indebted for the woodcuts used there as well as in our illustrated title-page.

WILLIAM ELLIOT HUDSON,
Member of the Council.

INTRODUCTION.

Of Leabhar na g-Ceart.

Two ancient vellum copies of this work are in existence, one in the Leabhar Leacain (Book of "Lecan") which was compiled from various other MSS., by Giolla Iosa Mor Mac Fírbisigh of Leacan, in the county of Sligo, chief historian to O'Dubhda (O'Dowda) in the year 1418. This copy begins at folio 184, and ends at folio 193, comprising thirty-eight closely written columns of the book. The other copy is preserved in Leabhar Bhaile an Mhuta (Book of "Ballymote") which was compiled by various persons, but chiefly by Solamh O'Droma, from older MSS., about the year 1390, for Tomaltach Mac Donnchadha (Mac Donough), then chief of the territories of Tir Oiliolla, Corann, Airteach, Tir Thuathail, and Clann Fearn-mhaighe, extending into the counties of Sligo, Roscommon, and Leitrim. This copy begins at folio 147 and ends at folio 154 a, col. 2, comprising thirty columns of that book.

Various modern paper copies are extant and accessible, but they have been found, on comparison with the two vellum ones just referred to, to be of no authority, as they were evidently made primarily or secondarily from either of them, with several corruptions of the respective scribes, none of whom thoroughly understood the language, as is quite evident from the nature of the corruptions (or, as they fancied, corrections) of the text made by them.

An abstract of this work was published by Hugh Mac Curtin in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, pp. 173–175, and pp. 221–240. An abstract of it is also given by Dr. John O'Brien, R. C. Bishop of Cloyne, in his Dissertations on the Laws of the ancient Irish, a work which was published by Vallancey, in 1774, in the third number of the Collectanea de Rebus Hibernicis, where this abstract occupies from p. 374 to p. 389. The suppression of O'Brien's name in the publication of this has caused confusion. Thus, when the author says, "in my copy of the Annales Innisfallenses, I find," &c., all subsequent writers took for granted that this referred to Vallancey's copy of these Annals, whereas the fact turns out to be that the "my copy of the Annales Innisfallenses," throughout this work, refers to a compilation of Annals made for Dr. John O'Brien, by John Conry, in 1760, at Paris, from all accessible Irish, Anglo-Irish, and English sources, of which the autograph is now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, with various marginal condemnatory notes in the hand-writing of Charles O'Connor of Belanagare. In consequence of the suppression of O'Brien's name in connexion with that work, it has been quoted as Vallancey's own by all those who have since treated of the subject, but more particularly by Mr. Moore, who frequently quotes Vallancey's Dissertation on the Laws of Tanistry, in his History of Ireland, as a work of authority.

The original Irish of the present work, however, never saw the light before the present edition, and writers have been quoting from it as the genuine work of Benean or St. Benignus, who was the disciple of St. Patrick, and his comharba or successor at Ard Macha (Armagh), but without letting the public know where the best copies of it are preserved, or what real claims it has to be considered the genuine work of St. Benean.

Benean was of a Munster family, being descended from Tadhg mac

Cein^a (the grandson of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster), to whom king Cormac mac Airt, about the year 254, had granted the territory of Cianachta Breagh, which comprised the district around Daimhliag (Duleek), and all the plain from thence to the hills of Maeldoid at the River Life (Liffey). The occasion of his conversion to Christianity is described in all the old Lives of St. Patrick, and in Benean's own Life^b. St. Patrick being at Leath Chathail (Lecale in Ulster), and having determined on celebrating the Easter of the year 433 near Teamhair or Tara, where, he knew, the Feis Teamhrach was then to be celebrated by the king and all his toparchs, took leave of his northern friend and convert Dicho, and, sailing southwards, put into the harbour of Inbhear Colpa (Colp), the mouth of the Boinn or Boyne. There he left his boat in care of one of his disciples, and set out on foot through the great plain of Breagh (Bregia), in which the palace (of Tara) was situate. On their way, and not long after landing, they went to the house of a respectable man (viri nobilis) named Sescnean, where they were entertained and passed the night. St. Patrick is said on this occasion to have converted and baptized this Sescnean and all his family, among whom was Benean, then seven years old, to whom, at the baptism, Patrick gave the name of Benignus, from his benign disposition. This boy became so attached to St. Patrick, that he insisted on going along with him. St. Patrick received him with pleasure into his so-

^a According to the genealogies of the saints collected by the O'Clerighs, Benean, bishop and primate, was the son of Sescnean, son of Laei, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum. See Leabhar na g-Ceart, post, p. 50, where he is said to be of the Cianachta of Gleann Geimhin, of the race of Tadhg, son of Cian.

^b Considerable extracts from the Life of Benignus have been printed by Colgan, in his Supplement to the Lives of St. Patrick, Trias Thaum, p. 203. From these it would appear that the Life was in Irish, and translated into Latin by Colgan, who intended publishing it at the 9th of November. There is an Irish Life of this saint in the Burgundian Library at Brussels, according to Mr. Bindon's Catalogue of the Irish MSS. in that Library, printed in the Proceedings of the R. I. A., vol. iii. p. 485.

ciety, and Benignus thenceforth became one of his most favorite disciples. According to the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, however, the apostle met Sescnean when he first landed at Inis Phadruig, near Dublin (lib. i. c. 45); but Doctor Lanigan thinks that this date is contradicted by the whole tenor of St. Patrick's proceedings. Be this as it may, we are informed in one of the chapters of the Life of St. Benignus, which Colgan has published in his Trias Thaum., p. 205, that when he became qualified to preach the Gospel, he was employed in various parts of Ireland, and particularly in those regions which St. Patrick had not visited in person. Among these is particularly mentioned "Iar Momonia", or West Munster, and "Corcomrogia" Corcumruadh (Corcomroe, in the county of Clare). But he became in a special manner the patron of Connacht, where he erected his principal church, called in the time of the writer Cill Benein, at Dun Lughaidh, in the territory of Conmaicne Chineil Dubhain ("Kilbanan" in the barony of Dunmore and county of Galway, where the remains of a round tower still indicate the ancient importance of the place); and it is added that he blessed the province of Connacht "from the River Drobhacis to Muireasc Eoghain near Luimneach, and from Leim Lara to Druim Snamha in the district of Gabhal Liuin" (Galloon, at Lough Erne), in which region the inhabitants paid him and his successors, yearly, "lacticiniorum, vitulorum, agnorum, idque generis animantium primitias."—Trias Thaum., c. 32, p. 205.

But the relatives of St. Benignus, to wit, the race of Eoghain of Caiseal, the descendants of Oilíoll Olum, and other Munster tribes, hearing that he had blessed the province of Connacht in preference to Munster, of the royal stock of which he was himself descended, though St. Patrick wished him to bless the south, were in no small degree offended; but St. Benignus, to make some amends for this obvious dereliction of provincial duty, commenced and composed that famous Chronicon, called the Psalter of Caiseal^c, in which are described the acts, laws, prerogatives, and succession, not only of the monarchs of all Ireland, but also those of the kings of Munster.

The passage runs as follows in the Latin of Colgan:—

“Cognati Sancti Benigni, vt populus Eoganiæ Casselensis, Olildiana progenies, et alij Momonienses, audito prædicto eius facto, non parum offensi et contra virum Dei indignati dicuntur. S. autem Benignus, vt istam offensam aliquo grato dilueret obsequio, famosum illud Chronicon, quod Psalterium Casselense nuncupatur, inchoavit et composuit: in quo non solùm totius Hiberniæ Monarcharum, sed specialiter regum Mumoniæ acta, jura, prærogativæ, et successio conscribantur.”—Trias Thaum., c. 33, p. 205.

Benignus afterwards, in 455, upon St. Patrick's retirement, succeeded him, and, having himself resigned his bishopric in 465, died on the 9th of November, 468, and was buried at Ard Macha (Armagh)^d.

The passage, which we have just cited out of Colgan's extracts from the Life of St. Benignus, has been overlooked by our writers. It es-

^c It is usually supposed that this work was called Psalter because it was principally written in verse. Doctor Lanigan, however, informs us (Ecl. Hist. vol. iii. p. 356, note 58), that “his deceased worthy friend, General Vallancey,” informed him that this was a mistake, as the original title of the work was Saltair, “which, he said, signifies chronicle; and that he states the same in his Prospectus of a Dictionary of the ancient Irish, at Taircaic.” Dr. Lanigan, however, though he would wish to agree with Vallancey in everything, was too profound a scholar to be led astray by his veneration for the memory of his departed friend, and, too honest to pass any opinion without some authority, he had the courage to add:

“Yet Saltair signifies also Psalter, and the Psaltair, or Saltair-na-ranna, was not a chronicle.”

^d Dr. Lanigan remarks (vol. i. p. 377): “How a story about Benignus having died at Rome, got into the Annals of Innisfallen, I cannot discover.” The Doctor was not aware that what he quotes throughout his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, as the Annals of Innisfallen, is only a compilation made at Paris, A. D. 1760, from old Irish stories, the Caitheim Thoirdhealbhagh, Giraldus Cambrensis, Pembroke's Annals, and Ware's Annals, by John Conry and Dr. O'Brien, author of the Irish Dictionary. We are indebted to the Irish Archaeological Society for this discovery.

tablishes the important fact that Bencan commenced (inchoavit) the celebrated Psalterium Casselense; and as it is a matter of extreme interest to examine the existing evidence as to that record, of which only a small fragment is known to exist, we shall collect what can be stated respecting it in a subsequent part of this Introduction.

That passage further proves that Bencan put together and entered in the Psalter an account of the rights (jura) of the monarchs of all Ireland, and especially of the kings of Munster. Now, one of the poems in our book, in treating of those rights says (p. 52), that Bencan put in the Psalter of Caiseal the history of each Munster king, and his income; and the conclusion reasonably follows that Bencan commenced and composed some such Book of Rights as this, and placed it in the Saltair Chaisil.

Edward O'Reilly (in his Irish Writers, p. 28), saw the fallacy of attributing the authorship of the Book of Rights, in its present form, to St. Bencan, and expressed his doubts as to the fact, as the "language, and some internal evidences in the composition, show it to be at least enlarged and altered in a period nearer to our own times." In fact, though it cannot be denied that there was a Leabhar na g-Ceart drawn up after the establishment of Christianity, which received the sanction of St. Benignus, it cannot be pronounced that any part of the work, in its present form, was written by that bishop.

It gives an account of the rights of the monarchs of all Ireland, and the revenues payable to them by the principal kings of the several provinces, and of the stipends paid by the monarchs to the inferior kings for their services. It also treats of the rights of each of the provincial kings, and the revenues payable to them from the inferior kings of the districts or tribes subsidiary to them, and of the stipends paid by the superior to the inferior provincial kings for their services.

These accounts are authoritatively delivered in verse, each poem being introduced by a prose statement; and of those joint pieces, twenty-one in number, seven are devoted to Munster, and the rights of the úrð mǫ, or monarch of all Ireland, are treated of under this head ; for it first supposes the king of Munster to be the monarch, and then subjoins an account of his rights, when he is not king over all Ireland. Two pieces are then devoted to the province of Connacht, two to each of the three divisions of Ulster, two to Midhe or Meath, and two to Leinster, with an additional poem on the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, and a concluding piece on the rights of the kings at Teamhair or Tara.

The prose usually purports to be a short statement or summary of the poem which follows, and which it treats as a pre-existing document. These prose introductions almost uniformly conclude with an allegation that Benean said or sang as follows, de quibus Benean dixit, . . . amhail ad fearð ðenéan ad beapτ po cheap po éacáim por fið fo gñí po éan ðenéan; see pp. 32, 42, 52, 62, 70, 80, 88, 98, 112, 118, 128, 136, 144, 156, 168, 176, 184, 204, 218, 224, 238. Some of them go farther, and call him in τ-úgour, the author, p. 32, and in fiú, the poet, p. 70. Nor is this direct allegation of Benean's authorship confined to the concluding prose lines; it occurs in an opening at p. 97, and it is put almost as strongly at p. 50, ir iad po beop τecurpa ðenéñ, "these are, further, the inculcations, or instructions of Benean;" and the introduction to the whole work in the Book of Baile an Mhuta, p. 30 (which has not a corresponding passage in the Book of Leacan), uses an expression but slightly different . . . amhail po ópoaiǫ ðenéan, i. e. "the tribute and stipends of Ireland as Benean ordained," . . . and it refers to the Book of Gleann da Loch as the authority.

Now, it is curious that the poems themselves, in general, do not profess to be the productions of Benean; and the additional rann or stanza at p. 68, infra (which is only found in the Book of Leacan), can scarcely be viewed as an exception to this. On the internal evidence of the poems, as to the authorship of them, it will become very clear that he was not the author; and those who have "fathered" the Book on St. Benean, to use O'Reilly's expression (Ir. Writ. p. 109), must have confined their reading to the prose.

It will appear upon careful consideration that most of the stipends and tributes mentioned in Leahhar na g-Ceart were traditional, and many of them of great antiquity. The tributes of Midhe (Meath) are said (p. 184), to be related as they were rendered from the time of Conn of the Hundred Battles. It is probable, indeed, that the accounts were originally digested, and perhaps put into metre, by St. Benean; but that the work was afterwards, towards the beginning of the tenth century, altered and enlarged by Cormac Mac Cuileannain, bishop-king of Caiseal or Munster, assisted by Sealbhach the sage, and Aenghus, so as to agree with the tribes and subdivisions of Ireland at that period. This appears quite plain from the notices of Sealbhach and Aenghus, at p. 60, and of Mac Cuileannain, at p. 86.

The poet Sealbhach was secretary to Cormac, "Seluacius S. Cormaco a secretis vir eximia pietatis et doctrinae."—Acta SS. p. 5; and in the same place Colgan says that he survived Cormac for some years, and that he wrote concerning his virtues and death: "Vixit autem Seluacius aliquot annis post S. Cormacum, de cuius morte et virtutibus inter alia multa, pulchrè scripsit."—Ibid. As Cormac, according to the Annals of Ulster, and to Ware, vol. i. p. 465, began his reign A. D. 901, and was killed at the battle of Bealach Mughna, A. D. 908, we can very nearly fix the date of the composition.

We shall presently find further evidence to show that the poems, in their present form, cannot be ascribed to so early a period as the time of St. Benean; but there is every reason to believe that the older Book of Rights, which was said to have been written by St. Benean, was in existence in the time of Cormac.

Now, let us look closely through these several pieces.

We have seen that the writer of the prose attributes the first piece to the gifted author Banean, the son of Sesenean; but the commencement of the poem immediately following leads to the inference that it was the composition of one who had arrived at the station of chief poet of Ireland; for he claims for the men who held that office, and wore the Taeidhean, or ornamented mantle, made of the skins and feathers of various coloured birds (Cormac's Glossary), the true knowledge of the rights of Caiseal, which, to bards^e, should be a question for ever.

In the second poem there is a similar allusion, p. 42, for the poet sings that it is his duty to record the right of Caiseal, and that it is pleasing to the king of Gabhran to find it acknowledged by his poet.

In the third piece the writer of the poem actually addresses Banean as a third person, and implores a blessing on him; asserting that it was he who put in the Saltair Chaisil the tradition or history of the king of Caiseal and of his income. That was evidently an antecedent Saltair, which the writer afterwards refers to (p. 60), as the Psalter of the God of Purity, in which he had found it recorded that Banean had remained at Caiseal from Shrovetide to Easter.

The writer of the prose, as usual, ascribes this poem to St. Banean, the son of Sesenean the Psalmist, but the poem itself furnishes internal evidence that it was not composed by him, or for centuries after his time. It refers to the cursing of Teamhair (Tara) by Saint Rnadhan, A. D. 563; see p. 53, n. ^u, infra; it mentions the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, and the duty of driving them out from Leinster and Munster (p. 54); and if those foreigners were the Northmen, such an allusion could not have been made before the eighth or ninth century. It states the great dignity and prerogatives of Caiseal, and complains that the people of Leinster and race of Conn did not subscribe to those prerogatives; and in the concluding stanza the poem requests Sealbhach the Saei, or learned Doctor, to maintain those privileges.

We have already, p. vii., mentioned the fourth piece, and its concluding verse, p. 68, wherein Benean is made to speak in the first person.

The fifth poem refers to Benean as the one who had shaped the stipends of Caiseal, and it does not say that he wrote the piece.

Again, in the sixth poem, which begins at p. 80, and ends at p. 87, distinct mention is made of Mac Cuileannain himself, from which we must conclude that these poems were written during his time, and indeed possibly this particular poem was written by himself, for the writer pledges the support of Mac Cuileannain to the sage or ollamh who maintains the system he is expounding, as it is.

Again, the poem which begins on p. 98, and ends on p. 111, plainly betrays a later age by mentioning (see p. 107, infra) the free tribe of "Siol Muireadhaigh," for the progenitor of this tribe, Muireadhach Muilleathan, king of Connacht, died, according to the Four Masters, in the year 700, rectè 701 (see Tribes and Customs of Ui Maine, p. 73, note f), and of course was unknown to Benean, though the prose, as usual, attributes the composition to him. He died in the year 468, i. e. 233 years before the ancestor whose race is mentioned in the poem. The language of the poem is, however, very different from the prose, and in its concluding rann the writer plainly distinguishes himself as the follower of Benean, not Benean himself, as follows:

"Well has Benean exactly found
This knowledge—it is no injustice,
I shall state it as it is,
Ye noble people, hear it!"

The mention of Leath Chathail in the poems on Uladh, pp. 164 and 172, is decisive to show that they could not have been written by Benean in the fifth century. We have shown (p. 165, n. ^f) that an ancestor of Cathal, from whom the territory took its name, was slain in the year 627. In the splendid volume on the Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Down, Connor, and Dromore, by the Rev. Mr. Reeves, pp. 201, 257, n. ^u, and 365, n. ^x, now published, the reader will find the materials for fixing the era of this Cathal to the middle of the eighth century, and of the adoption of the territorial name to the middle of the ninth, A. D. 850.

So, the frequent references to the Galls, and to Tomar, as prince of Dublin, pp. 41, 206, demonstrate that the poems in which they occur could not have been written before the end of the ninth century, as will appear from a subsequent part of this Introduction.

The writer of the poem, at p. 134, says that he had found the history of the race of Niall in books where Benean's faithful hand had traced it, making it as plain as language can, that the writer composed his poem founded upon previous books of which Benean was author.

The allusions to Benean at pp. 155, 168, 178, all are to the like effect; that at p. 168 speaks of Benean as having inculcated the matter in his day, i. e., as if he were then dead; and that at p. 178, when it alleges that a Latin scholar had fully observed the right, must mean, either that Benean had composed his book in Latin, or that some other Latin scholar had intervened, and written on the subject in Latin.

The language of the poem which commences at p. 204, is remarkable; viz., that "Benean related the right of the king of Laighin; in the decision of an author he found it;" intimating the writer's testimony that Benean had recorded this right in conformity with the judgment of a previous author.

Even the poem on the Galls of Ath Cliath does not purport to be written by Benean; for the writer says:

"The profits of Ath Cliath / will not conceal,
As Benean has fixed them."

This poem on the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, pp. 224, &c., and their conversion to Christianity by St. Patrick, may possibly have been produced about the same period of Cormac Mac Cuileannain, though it is difficult to believe that it was allowed to be transcribed into the Sal-tair Chaisil by Cormac and his secretary, who, living so near the period of the first Northman or Danish settlement in Dublin, could not be supposed to lend their authority to such a story.

It is much more likely that this poem was written and circulated at a much later period, when the Christian Danes refused to submit to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction or authority of Armagh; and when it was found useful by the Danish party to have it believed that their ancestors had been settled in Dublin as early as the fifth century, and converted to Christianity by St. Patrick, immediately after his having cursed Teamhair or Tara. The Danes of Dublin, on that occasion, placed themselves under Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury; and the jealousy that existed between the two races at that period is manifest from the letter addressed to Ralph, Archbishop of Canterbury, by the clergy and burgesses of Dublin, published by Ussher (Syllog. No. 40), in which they tell him that the bishops of Ireland, and most of all the one who resided at Armagh, entertained a very great jealousy against them. “Sciatis vos reverâ, quod Episcopi Hiberniæ maximum zelum erga nos habent et maximè ille Episcopus qui habitat Ardimachæ; quia nos nolumus obedire ordinationi; sed semper sub vestro dominio esse volumus.”

How early this Ibero-Danish fignent was copied, as an authentic document, into the historical books of the nation, it is now difficult to determine, but it is quite obvious it had found its way into Leabhar na g-Ceart long before the period of the compilation of the Books of Leacan and Ballymote, for it had been interpolated in the MSS. from which the copies as they now stand were made.

This fiction also attempts to pull down the veneration for the Ne-potes Neill, by making St. Patrick curse the monarch of that race, from which it looks probable that some of the rival race of Oilioll Olum had a hand in the production of it; for it certainly was intended to raise the dignity of Caiseal above that of Teamhair, and to exalt the race of Oilioll Olum above that of Conn of the Hundred Battles. As this controversy respecting the claims of the northern and southern Irish kings to supremacy and renown gave origin to a great number of Irish poems by Tadhg Mac Daire (Teige Mac Dary) and the Munster poets, which were replied to by Lughaidh O'Clerygh (Lewy O'Clery) and the northern literati, the Editor will offer a few thoughts on the subject in this place. See O'Reilly's Irish Writers, p. 149, under the year 1600.

Dr. O'Brien appears, from various notices throughout his Irish Dictionary, to have thought that the race of Oilioll Olum never submitted to the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles; for he speaks of Conn himself, and of his grandson Cormac, and even of Flann Sionna, who defeated Cormac mac Cuileannain in 908, as kings of Meath, and of the two northern provinces. But in this and other respects Dr. O'Brien has been led to make assertions relative to the Irish monarchs which cannot stand the test of true criticism, for though it must be acknowledged that the Irish monarchs had little influence in Leath Mhogha, or the southern half of Ireland, still we must believe that since the introduction of Christianity the Irish monarchs were principally of the race of Niall of the Nine Hostages, the ancestor of the O'Neills and their correlative families. In the ancient Lives of St. Patrick it is stated that when the Irish apostle came to Aileach, he predicted that sixteen of the race of Eoghan, the son of Niall, would become kings of all Ireland; and though we need not believe in this as a prediction, it is reasonable to conclude that those kings were well known and acknowledged; and the fact is that they are mentioned and called kings of all Ireland even by the Munster writers themselves, whatever authority they may have exercised over the chieftains of Munster. Connell Mageoghegan, in his translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, gives us his idea of what was understood by "King of Ireland," in the following observation under the reign of Mael na m-Bo, ancestor of the family of Mac Murchadha of Leinster :

"A. D. 1041. Dermott Mac Moylenemo was king nine years.

"The kings or chief monarches of Ireland were reputed and reckoned to be absolute monarches in this manner: If he were of Leath Con, or Con's halfe in deale, and one province of Leath Moye, or Moy's halfe in deale, at his command, he was coumpted to be of sufficient power to be king of Taragh, or Ireland; but if the party were of Leath Moye, if he could not command all Leath Moye and Taragh with the lordshipp thereunto belonging, and the province of Ulster or Connought (if not both), he would not be thought sufficient to be king of all Ireland. Dermott Mac Moylenemo could command Leath Moye, Meath, Connought, and Ulster; therefore, by the judgement of all, he was reputed sufficient monarch of the whole."

According to the old Annals of Innisfallen none of the kings of Caisel or Munster attained to the monarchy of all Ireland, since the introduction of Christianity, except the five following: "1. Oengus, son of Nadfraech; 2. Eochaidh, son of Oengus, son of Nadfraech; 3. Cathal, son of Finguine; 4. Felim, son of Crimhthann; 5. Brian, son of Cinn-eide." Of these the first was contemporary with St. Patrick, but there seems to be no authority for making him monarch of all Ireland, except this Munster chronicle, which was compiled in the monastery of Innisfallen. According to the Book of Leacan, Laeghaire, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages, was monarch of Ireland for thirty years after the arrival of St. Patrick, and, according to all authorities, Laeghaire was succeeded by his relative, Oilioll Molt, son of Dathi, and Oilioll was succeeded by Laeghaire's own son, Lughaidh, who died, according to the Annals of Tighearnach, in the year 508. After the death of Lughaidh there was an interregnum of five years, and the Munster annalist seems to have taken the opportunity of this interregnum, which was acknowledged by the UiNeill annalists, of placing the monarchical crown on the head of Eochaidh, the son of Aenghus, king of Caiséal, and making him wear it for thirteen years after 513, when Muircheartach Mor Mac Earca, the great grandson of Niall of the Nine Hostages, had, according to the other annalists, mounted the throne.

The kings of Caiséal appear to have put forward no claims to the monarchy of all Ireland till the year 709, when Cathal, the son of Finguine, ancestor of the family of O'Caemh (O'Keeffe), and king of Munster, plundered the plain of Breagh or Bregia, and compelled Fearghal, the son of Maelduin, monarch of Ireland, to give him hostages; in consequence of which he was looked upon by his own people as monarch of Ireland till his death, which occurred in the year 742. But the northern writers do not acknowledge him as monarch, for during the period which elapsed from the year 709, when he could have had some pretension to the monarchy, till 742, the other annalists set down as monarchs of all Ireland the following:

1. Fearghal, son of Maelduin, who died, according to Tighearnach, on Friday, the 16th of December, 722.

2. Fogartach, son of Niall, who was monarch of Ireland for one year and some months.

3. Cinaeth, son of Irgalach, who was monarch of Ireland three years.

4. Flaithbheartach, son of Loingseach, seven years.

5. Aedh Ollan, son of Fearghal, nine years.

From the death of Cathal, the son of Finguine, the Munster historians claim no monarch of all Ireland down to the year 840, when Feidhlimidh (Felimy), the son of Crimhthann, king of Munster, and Niall, the son of Aedh, monarch of Ireland, had a meeting at Cluain-Feartha Brennain (Clonfert) in Connacht, where the monarch submitted to Feidhlimidh (Felimy), who was considered, at least by his own people of Munster, monarch of Ireland from that period till his death, which occurred in 847^f. From this year, however, the kings of Caiseal had no pretensions to the monarchy till the year 1002, when the great Brian Borumha mounted the throne of Ireland.

Mr. Moore, however, will not allow any monarch of all Ireland to the race of Eibhear, or the people of Leath Mhogha, or Munster, from the time of St. Patrick till the accession of Brian in 1002. This

^f Mac Curtin, in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, p. 175, asserts that this Feidhlimidh was not king of Ireland, as Cambrensis erroneously styles him, in his History of Ireland, but that he was king of Munster for twenty-seven years. But Mac Curtin should have known that this should not have been attributed as an error to Cambrensis, as the older Munster annalists mention Feidhlimidh as one of the five Munster kings who obtained the monarchy of all Ireland, subsequently to the introduction of Christianity; and it is quite evident from Mac Curtin's own account of Feidhlimidh's regal visitation of the provinces of Connacht, Ulster, Meath, and Leinster, to whose kings he made the usual monarchical presents, and from whom he received the entertainments due to the Irish monarchs, that he was considered the árv ri g, or sole monarch of all Ireland. Mac Curtin's remark, that his progress through Ireland "had success upon account of the union and amity the Irish princes had among themselves at this time," is beneath criticism; for it is distinctly stated in the old Annals of Innisfallen, that Feidhlimidh, the son of Crimhthann, received homage from Niall, the son of Aedh, king of Teamhair, in the year 824 (a mistake for 840), when Feidhlimidh became full king of Ireland, and sat in the seat of the abbots of Cluain Feartha (Clonfert); and in an Irish poem purporting to give a regular account of Feidhlimidh's circuit through Ireland, it is distinctly stated that he remained half a year in the plain of the River Finn, plundering the Cineal Chonaill, and that he also plundered Dal Riada and Dal Araidhe, and that he remained a whole year at Ard Macha, during which he preached to the people every Sunday. The words of Giraldus are as follows:

"Igitur a tempore Felmidii Regis, et obitu Turgesii, vsque ad tempus Rotherici: Conactiæ regnum duravit (Qui vltimus de hac gente monarcha fuit, & vsque hodie Conactiæ præsidet: Cuius etiam tempore, et per quem Rex Lageniæ Dermotus scilicet Murchardi filius, a regno expulsus fuerat) septendecim Reges in Hiberniâ regnauerunt."—Topographia Hiberniæ, Dist. iii. c. 44.

is a fact on which he frequently and emphatically speaks. See especially his History of Ireland, vol. ii. pp. 142, 143.

It is probable that the tributes paid to the Irish monarchs and provincial kings remained nearly the same as those described in the present form of Leabhar na g-Ceart till the destruction of the Irish monarchy. After the English invasion, the power of the provincial kings was very much limited; the great Anglo-Norman families imposed various tributes unknown to the ancient Irish, and in course of time the Irish chieftains who retained their power began to imitate them, and the old order of the country was disturbed and broken.

Of this kind of exaction the following is quoted by Dr. O'Connor, from an Irish MS. preserved in the Library of the Duke of Buckingham at Stowe, Codex iii. fol. 28. Stowe Catalogue, p. 168. It appears to have been taken from a poem by Torna O'Maelchonaire, chief poet of Connacht, who attended at the inauguration of Feidhlimidh O'Conchobhair on the hill of Cara Frasigh, A. D. 1315.

“These are the stipends of the royal chieftains of Connacht from O'Conchobhair [O'Conor], i. e. twelve score beeves^g, and twelve score sheep on May-day to Mac Oireachtaigh [Mageraghty]; twelve score beeves and twelve score hogs to himself [O'Conor] every Allhallowtide, and these are levied from Uball^h. Twelve score milch cowsⁱ, and twelve score sheep on May-day to O'Fionnachtaigh; twelve score hogs and twelve score beeves every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied for him from Luighne Chonnacht [Leyny]. Twelve score milch cows and twelve score sheep to O'Maoilbhreunin [Mulrenin] every May-day; twelve score beeves and twelve score hogs every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied for him from Tir Fhiachrach [Tireragh], and from Cuil Cnamha^k, and from Cuil Cearnamha. Twelve score milch cows and twelve score sheep on May-day to O'Flannagain; and twelve score beeves and twelve score hogs every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied in Tir-Amhalghaidh [Tirawley] and in Irrus [Erris]."

It will be seen by comparing the stipends and tributes in this extract with the two poems printed infra, p. 99 to 111, and from 113 to 117, that the tributes and stipends paid by these territories do not at all agree; and it is, therefore, evident that they were remodelled after the English invasion.

The subsidy mentioned in the tract on Ui Maine, preserved in the Book of Leacan, as paid by the king of Connacht to the chief of Ui Maine, will also appear to have belonged to a later period, for, according to that Tract (see Tribes and Customs of Hy-Many, p.93), the king of Ui Maine is entitled to ten steeds, ten foreigners [slaves], ten standards, and ten mantles [matals]; whereas, according to Leabhar na g-Ceart, ut inji'à, p. 115, he was entitled only to seven cloaks, seven horses, seven hounds, and seven red tunics.

Some curious specimens of these remodelled exactions are given by Mr. Hardiman in his Irish Deeds, published in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xv., Nos. xiv. and xv., with the Rentals of O'Brien and Mac Namara, in the fourteenth century, and No. xxix., detailing some exactions of Mac Carthy More. The last Earl of Desmond seems to have raised these tributes and exactions to a most exorbitant extent, as appears by a list of his "rents, victuals, and other revenues," in a MS. at Lambeth, Carew Collection, No. 617, p. 212. The same collection, No. 611, contains a list of "services and duties due to Mac Cartie More from Sir Owen O'Sullivan." More of these Irish exactions will be found detailed in the will of Domhnall O'Galchobhair, who was steward to Hugh Roe O'Donnell, who died in Spain, in the year 1602; and in a paper MS. in Marsh's Library, Class V., 3, Tab. 2. No. 20, which gives a list of the rents, services, customs, &c., due to O'Duinn (O'Doyne, now Dunne), chief of Iregan, in the Queen's County, and in various Inquisitions, amongst the most curious of which is one taken "apud the King's ould castle in the city of Cork, decimo septimo die Octobris, 1636, coram Willielmum Fenton et alios," in which the rents and customs due to Daniel Mac Carty, of Kilbrittan, alias Mac Carty Reogh, then lately deceased, are minutely detailed. The following account of the duties and customs of East Breifny, furnished to Her Majesty's Commissioners at Cavan, by Sir John O'Reilly, on the 1st of April, 1585, will afford a fair specimen of modern Hibernia Anglicana exactions. It is preserved in the Carew Collection at Lambeth, No. 614, p. 162.

“By Her Majesty's Commissioners at Cavan, the 1st of Aprriell, 1585.

“Sir John O'Reily sett down the limites of your territories, and the baronies accordinge the new Indentures.

“Item what rents, duties, and customs you ought to have out of every pole in the five baronies,” &c.

To the second of these questions he replies:

“The Dewties and Customes, &c.

“Orely by auncient custom and usadge of the country had always out of the baronies of the Cavan and Tullaghgarvy, and out of every of the other thre barronies which he hath lost by the division, yearly out of every barrony xlv. li. [i. e. £45], as often as he had any cause to cesse the said barronies, either for the Queene's rents and dewties, or for any charge towards Onele, or other matter, which sometimes was twice or thrise a yeare, and every time xlv. li. to his owne use, besides the charge of the cesse.

“Item, he had lykewise by the said custome and usadge all manner of chargis that either his son, or any other of his men or followers, weare put into by reson of their beinge in pledge or attendinge by commandment of the Lord Deputy in Dublin, or otherwhere for matter of the said Orely.

“Item, by the said custom Orely had all manner of fees and pensions, and recompenses given by the said Orely to any learned counsell or other solicitor or agent for the cause of the contry, borne and payed by the said contry.

“ Item, by the said custom Orely had yearely over and beside all other dewtis and customes towards his chargis in going to Dublin out of every pole, xvi^d. star.

“ Item, by the said custom he had yearely out of every viii. pooles of lande through the whole fyve barronis, one fatt beef for the spendinge of his house.

“ Item, by the said custom he had one horse for himselfe, one horse for his wife, and one horse for his son and heir, with one boye attendinge uppon every horse kept through the whole fyve barronis yearely.

“ Item, by the said custom it was lawfull for Orely to cesse uppon the Mac Bradis, the Mac Enroes, the Gones, and the Jordans, by the space of iii. quarters of a yeare yearely, one foteman uppon every poole which the said sirnames had, to kepe his cattell, to repe and bynd his corne, to thrashe, hedge and diche, and do other husbandry and mercenary work for the said Oreley.

“ Item, by the said custom the said Orely had upon the Bradis, the Gones, the Mac Enroes, and the Jordans, out of every poole of land yearely, thre quarters of a fatt beefe, and out of every two pooles one fatt porke, and also the cessinge of strangers, their men and horses, as often as any did come in frendship to the country.

“ Item, by the said custom the said Orely had by dewty all manner of chardgis both for workmen rofe and laborers and victualls for the buildinge and maintainge of his castell of the Cavan and all other necessary romes and offices about the same, borne and payed by the gentill and others of the barrony of the Cavan.

“ The dewtis of the towne of the Cavan also by the said custom, as rents, dringk, and other dewtis now takin and not denied.

“ Item, Sir Hugh Oreley, father unto the said Sir John, had in morgadge from divers of the gentill of Clomnahon xlviij. pooles in Gawne, l. mylche kyne w^{ch} morgage discended upon Sir John, and he was seised of the said xlviij. pooles untill the divission, which he desireth to continue possession of or els that he may be payed the said l. milche kyne.”

Of the Saltair Chaisil.

The Psalter of Caiseal is particularly referred to in the Book of Rights as the work in which St. Benean entered the traditional history of the tributes of the kings of Munster:

Beneán—beanoacht for in n-gein, do pas ro a Saltair Chaisil, reanóir cach rí g'ir a ríach, ir deach imchéit sír Muínan.—Infrà, p. 52.

This passage occurs in a poem which we may take to have been the composition of Sealbach and Aenghus, to which Cormac Mac Cuileannain adds his approval, recording his direction that his secretary and scribe should preserve the privileges of Munster as Benean had left them. In another part of the poem the same document is evidently referred to under the name of the Psalter of the God of Purity, in which it was found that Benean remained at Caiseal from Shrovetide to Easter.—p. 60.

There is another entry in our work, in an addition to the prose in the copy contained in the Book of Baile an Mhuta, alleging that the Psalter of Caiseal had said that Benean sang or wrote the song which follows: “hoc carmen ut Psalterium Caisil dicit.” p. 238. It is clearly a mistake to attribute that poem, at least in its present state, to Benean; but it is not clear what particular document the writer of the prose meant to designate as the Psalterium Caisil.

Therefore we proceed to lay before the reader some information respecting the Psalter or Psalters so called ; and this may seem the more requisite, as we have already, in giving the grounds for believing that Benean or Benignus framed the original Book of Rights, shown a most ancient testimony, proving that he commenced and composed a Psalterium Casselese, in which the rights, or jura, of the Irish monarchs, &c., were stated: see Colgan's extracts from the Latin Life of Benignus, quoted above, p. v.

It is remarkable that Colgan, who had that notice in the Life of Benignus before him, takes no notice of it, but in another place (Trias Thaum., p. 205), ascribes the writing or compiling of the Psalterium Casselese to Cormac Mac Cuileannain. His words are as follows:

“S. Cormacus Rex Momoniæ, Archiepiscopus Casseleensis, et martyr, qui in patriis nostris annalibus peritissimus Scotorum appellatur, scripsit de Genealogiâ Sanctorum Hiberniæ, lib. i., et, de Regibus aliisque antiquitatibus ejusdem, nobile opus quod Psalterium Casselese appellatur, et in magno semper habetur pretio. Passus est S. Cormacus an 903, vel ut alii 908.” Keating, in his History of Ireland, Haliday's edition, Preface, p. xcvi., makes a like allegation in a passage which we shall presently cite.

Notwithstanding this testimony of Keating and Colgan, who seem to have been well acquainted with the literary monuments of their native country, we are informed by Connell Mageoghegan, in the dedication of his translation of the “Annals of Clonmacnoise” to Terence Coghlan, dated April 20th, 1627, that the “Psalter of Cashel” was compiled by the order of the great Irish monarch, Brian Borumha. His words are:

“Kinge Bryen sceinge into what rudeness the kingdome was fallen, after setting himself in the quiet government thereof, and restored each one to his auncient patrimonye, and repaired their churches and houses of religion, he caused open schools to be kept in the several parishes, to instruct their youth, which by the said warres were growen rude and altogether illiterate. He assembled together all the nobilitie of the kingdome, as well spirituall as temporall, to Cashell in Munster, and caused them to compose a booke, containing all the inhabitations, events, and septs that lived in this land, from the first peopleing and inhabitation and discoverye thereof, after the creation of the world, untill that present time, which booke they caused to be called by the name of the PSALTER OF CASHELL; signed it with his owne hand, together with the hands of the kings of the five provinces, and also with the hands of all the bishoppes and prelates of the kingdome; caused several copies thereof to be given to the kings of the provinces, with strict charge that there should be no credit given to any other chronicles thenceforth, but should be held as false, disannulled, and quite forbidden for ever.

“ Since which time there were many septs in the kingdome that lived by itt, and whose profession was to chronicle and keep in memorie the state of the kingdome, as well for the time past, present, and to come; and now, because they cannot enjoy that respect again by their said profession, as heretofore they and their auncestors received, they sett nought by the said knowledge, neglect their bookes, and choose rather to putt their children to learn English than their own native language; insomuch that some taylors do cutt with their seissors the leaves of the said bookes which were [once] held in greate account, and sleice them in long peeces to make measures of, so that the posterities are like to fall into grose ignorance of any things which happened before their time.”

Now these accounts look rather conflicting, but the probability is that they are all true: i. e. that St. Benean commenced the Psalter; that Cormac continued it down to his own time, and remodelled the Book of Rights so as to state the tributes and stipends of the country, as they then stood; or, to use the words of our text (pp. 107, 169, 190), map atá; and that King Brian had a further continuation framed to his time. It cannot be proved that the prose introductions in the present work were composed when King Brian compiled his Psalter; but they must have been written not very far from his time; for it is plain that they were composed long after the poems of Cormac's day, to which they are prefixed, and there is every reason to believe from the entire context, that they were written before the Anglo-Norman invasion, and while the Northern Galls were masters of Dublin.

Keating, and others of his day, whom we shall presently cite, mention the Psalter of Caiseal and the Book of Rights as separate works; but we must recollect that the Book of Rights stood separate in the MSS. from which we print it, and no doubt in other MSS., some centuries before his time.

The Psalter of Caiseal is constantly referred to by the Irish writers of the seventeenth century as the work of Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and as then extant. Keating (ubi supra) mentions it as the first and most important of the historical books extant in his time. The following are his words:

“Αἰγυρ αν μίεθ α θεαμαρ πέ ρεανῶρ Ειρεανν ιρ μνίεαρτα ζο

Which may be translated as follows :

“As to what belongs to the history of Ireland, it should be considered that it is authentic, because it used to be purged at the Feis Teamhrach every third year, in the presence of the nobility, clergy, and ollamhs ; in evidence of which remain the following chief books, which are still to be seen in Ireland, viz. : Saltair Chaisil, written by the holy Cormac Mac Cuileannain, king of the two provinces of Munster, and Archbishop of Caiseal; the Book of Ard Macha (Armagh); the Book of Cluain Eidhneach Fionntain, in Laeighis; Saltair na Rann, written by Aenghus Ceile De; the Book of Gleann Da Loch; Leabhar na g-Ceart, written by the holy Benean, son of Sesgnean; Uidhir Chiarain, which was written at Cluain mic Nois; Leabhar Buidhe Mholing; and Leabhar Dubh Mholaga.”

Doctor John Lynch, who was contemporary with Keating, mentions these books in a different order, in his translation of Keating's History of Ireland :

“Hæc cum ita sînt, et insignium etiam exterorum authorum testimoniis comprobata, si vel leviter ad ea aspicerent recentiores Angli authores, amplam profectò benè potius quam malè de Hibernis loquendi ansam habere; et quidem amplissimam, si domestica Hiberniæ documenta legerent, et intelligerent, fidem enim illa exigunt indubitam, quandoquidem tertio quoquo anno in Comitibus Teamorensibus a regni proceribus, præsulibus, et literatis accuratè excuterentur. ¹ Liber Armachanus.—It is doubtful whether this is the MS. now called the Book of Armagh, which could scarcely be called a p̃rim̃leab̃ ip̃reac̃m̃c̃ũr̃a, as it contains only some notices of the life of St. Patrick, and which was called Canoin Phadruig by the Irish. It was probably a historical Manuscript of the same sort as Sir James Ware also mentions the Psalter of Cashel (in his Irish Writers, at Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and in his Archbishops of Cashel, at Cormac), as extant in his time, and held in high esteem; and adds that he had some genealogical collections which had been extracted from it about three centuries before his time.

Lhwyd, Nicholson, and Dr. O’Conor (Epist. Nunc. p. 65), have all mentioned that there is a part of the Psalter of Cashel in an old Leabhar na h-Uidhri, or the Annals of Clonmacnoise.

^m Liber Nuachongbhala.—There are at least six churches of this name in Ireland, one in Mayo, one in Westmeath, one in Londonderry, one in Clare, one in Cork, and we are informed by Colgan that it was the ancient name of “Navan,” in the county of Meath. Nothing, however, remains, or at least is known to the Editor, to tell which of these places the book belonged to, or what became of it.

ⁿ Liber Cluain Egnach Fintoni, i. e. the “Book of Clonenagh,” a monastery near Mountrath, in the Queen’s county, erected by St. Fintan. Keating elsewhere calls this the Annals of Cluain Eidhneach, and gives a long quotation from it, which treats of the Synod of Rath Breasail, and gives the boundaries of the Irish dioceses as established by that Synod. This MS.,

which was one of great importance, is now unknown.

^o Psalterium Rithmorum.—A copy of this, on vellum, is preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

^a Jurium Liber.—This is the Ἐεαβηρ na ḡ-Cearτ, now for the first time printed.

^r Uidhir Chiarain, now called Leabhar na h-Uidhri. A considerable fragment of this MS., in the handwriting of Maelmuire, son of Celiochair Mac Cuinn na m-Bocht, is now preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy.

^t Liber Niger de Molagga.—Now unknown.

MS. on parchment, in the Bodleian Library^u at Oxford, consisting of 292 pages in large folio. This MS. was examined by Dr. Todd, who published an account of its contents, with observations on its age and history, in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. ii. p. 336. In the year 1844, and again in 1846, the Editor went over it with the most anxious care, to see how much of the Psalter it might preserve; and he has come to the conclusion that it contains a very considerable fragment of that work. This MS., as it now stands, consists of 146 folios or 292 pages folio, paged consecutively in modern figures, though it is evidently defective by many folios in various places. When perfect it must have been very voluminous, as it appears, from various notices of the scribes, that it contained a transcript of all that could be then read of Saltair Chaisil; Leabhair an Phreabain Chunga, i. e. the Book of the "Shred" of Cong; the Book of Rathain [Rahen, near Tullamore, King's county]; the Leabhar Buidhe Fearna, i. e. the Yellow Book of Ferns. It was transcribed in 1453 by Seaan (John) Buidhe O'Cleirigh, and others, at Rath an Photaire (now called in Irish Ráé α' Φοτσαρ, and Anglicè Pottlerath, a townland in which are some ruins of a castle, situate in the parish of Kilnamanagh, barony

^u O'Reilly states, in his Irish Writers, p. lx., that the Psalter of Cashel was extant in Limerick in 1712, as appears by a large folio MS. in the Irish language, preserved in the Library of Cashel, written in Limerick in that year, and partly transcribed from the original Psalter of Cashel; and he adds, that the original Psalter of Cashel was long supposed to be lost, but that it is now said to be deposited in the British Museum. The Cashel MS. here referred to by O'Reilly is a compilation made in 1712, by Dermot O'Connor, the translator of Keating, who calls it the Psalter of Cashel; but this name was given it by himself, though he never saw the Psalter of Cashel. Dishonest compilers of this description have imposed dignified names upon their own compilations, to impose on the credulity of purchasers. A copy of the Book of Ballymote, with some additions made by Teige O'Naghten, now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 1. 15, bears the title of Σαλταρ να Τεαμπαδ, i. e. the Psalter of Tara, and the Editor has frequently heard it positively asserted that the Psalter of Tara is preserved in the Library of the University of Dublin, but there are no other grounds for saying so.

of Cranagh, and county of Kilkenny), for Edmond, the head of a sept of the Butler family, who assumed the Irish chieftain name of Mac Richard. This MS. remained in the possession of Mac Richard till the year 1462, when he was defeated in a battle fought at Baile an Phoill, now anglicized "Piltown," in the barony of "Iverk," county of Kilkenny, the property of the Earl of Bessborough, by Thomas, Earl of Desmond, to whom he was obliged to give up this very copy of the Psalter of Cashel (which was then more perfect than it is at present), and also another MS. called Leabhar na Carraige, i. e. the Book of Carrick [on Suir]. This appears from a memorandum in the margin of folio 110 p. b. of which the following is a literal translation:

"This was the Psalter of Mac Richard Butler, until the defeat at Baile an Phoill was given to the Earl of Ormond and to Mac Richard by the Earl of Desmond (Thomas), when this book and the Book of Carrick were obtained in the redemption of Mac Richard; and it was this Mac Richard that had these books transcribed for his own use, and they remained in his possession until Thomas, Earl of Desmond, wrested them from him."

This memorandum was written in the MS. while it was in the possession of Thomas Earl of Desmond, whose name "Thomas of Desmond," appears in English, in his own handwriting, on folio 92, a. For a very curious account of this battle fought between the Butlers and the young Earl of Ormond, see the Annals of Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh, "Dudley Fírbisse," published in the Miscellany of the Irish Archæological Society, p. 247, and the Editor's notes, pp. 295, 296.

As Dr. Todd has already published a long account of this manuscript, the Editor deems it necessary only to notice such parts of it as he thinks were transcribed from the Psalter of Cashel. It is not here intended to give the reader an idea of the general contents of the MS., for that would occupy many pages, but to show how much of that Psalter is preserved as it was copied for Edmond Mac Richard Butler in 1453.

At fol. 14, a. a., line 29, the transcriber states that there ends the part copied from the Book of Cong, called Leabhar an Phreabain. The first notice of the Saltair Chaisil occurs at fol. 42, b., where the limits of Ur Mhumha or Ormond are given.

At fol. 58, b., the scribe writes that he had then transcribed all that he found together (consecutive, or without chasms) in the Psalter of Cashel (α Σαλταρ Χασιλ), and much from Leabhar Rathain, and from Leabhar an Phreabain.

At fol. 59, a. a., commences the Feilire Aenghuis or Festilogium of Aenghus Ceile De, which is accompanied, as usual, by an interlined gloss. This, which is in very good preservation, ends on fol. 72. It was evidently copied from the Saltair Chaisil. This is immediately followed by a poem headed Finghin cecinit do Chormac mac Cuileann, Finghin sang for Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and beginning:

“Θά μάδ μῆρι βα ρί πέιλ.”
“Were I a king manifestly.”

Fol. 73, a. a. A poem on the genealogy of the kings of Munster, beginning:

“Cain cúic maccu Crimthann réimh?”
“Who were the five sons of Crimthann Sreimh?”

This is undoubtedly copied from the Saltair Chaisil.

Fol. 73, a., line 16, begins a poem on the descendants of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster:

“Clann Ailella Olum uill.”
“The sons of the great Aileall Olum.”

Between the folios now consecutively marked 74 and 75 there is an evident chasm.

Fol. 75, a. a., line 16, begins the genealogy of the race of Eir-eamhon (Heremon), undoubtedly copied from the Saltair Chaisil. “Hibernia insola inter duos filios principales Militis, id est Herimon et Eber, in duas partes divisa est.” This article is also to be found, totidem verbis, in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta (Ballymote), in which it is distinctly stated that it was transcribed from the Saltair Chaisil.

At fol. 78 there is a chasm of many folios, though the modern pagination runs consecutively.

Fol. 79, a. A part of Cormac’s Glossary, beginning with the word umbur̄ ƿopopnoi. The remainder is perfect, but two folios are misplaced. On the folio marked 81 is a short account of the seats of the kings of Caiseal. The glossary ends on folio 86, col. 3, where Seaan Buidhe O’Cleirigh writes a memorandum that he had finished the transcription of the Sanasan or Etymologicon of the Saltair Chormaic, on the fifth day of February and eighth of the moon, for Edmund Butler Mac Richard.

Fol. 80, b. A tract on the derivations of names of places in Ireland, stated on the second last line of col. b., to have been transcribed from Leabhar Buidhe Fearna, i. e. the Yellow Book of Ferns. The matter, from this down to fol. 93, was probably taken from the Leabhar Buidhe Fearna, but from thence to folio 123 is evidently from the Saltair Chaisil. The principal contents are as follows:

Fol. 93, a. a. Genealogy of the Race of Eibhear. The language very ancient.

Fol. 93, b. a. line 29. A curious account of the sons of Eochaidh Muigh-mheadhoin, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century, and of their father’s bequest to each of them.

Fol. 93, b. b. An account of the cause of the expulsion of certain families from the north of Ireland, and their settlement in the south, beginning in Latin thus: “De causis quibus exules Aquilonensium ad Mumensenses.”

Fol. 94, b. b., line 17. A historical tale relating to Mac Con, monarch of Ireland, and Oiliol Olum, king of Munster.

Fol. 96, a. a. An account of the Battle of Magh Mucruimhe, fought near Athenry, County Galway, between the ex-monarch Mac Con, and Art, monarch of Ireland in the third century.

Fol. 98, a. a., line 22. Curious historical stories, in very ancient language, relating to Crimthann Mor Mac Fidhaigh, monarch of Ireland, and other Munster kings of the race of Eibhear.

Fol. 99, b. b. An account of the expulsion of the people called Deise from Midhe (Meath), and their settlement in Munster. The language is very ancient.

Fol. 106, b., col. 3. A genealogical account of the Race of Ir, seventh son of Mileadh or Milesius. This is very copious, and the language very ancient, as is manifest from its grammatical terminations and obsolete idioms.

Fol. 111, b. a. A list of the Milesian or Scotie kings of Ireland, from Eireamhon (Heremon) down to Brian Borumha. This affords strong evidence that the Saltair Chaisil was enlarged or continued by that monarch.

Fol. 115, a., cols. 2, 3. A list of the bishops of Ard Macha (Armagh), synchronized with the kings of Caiseal. Colgan has published this list in his Trias Thaum., p. 292, as “ex Psalterio Casselensi.” It is carried down to Domhnall, who succeeded A. D. 1092, and who was living when this list was made out. Lanigan remarks, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. iii. p. 357, note 59, that some writers pretend that Cormac was not the author of this, and that it was compiled after his times; and he acknowledges that “there are some circumstances mentioned as taken from it, which belong to a later period; for instance, the latter part of the catalogue of the archbishops of Armagh (apud Tr. Th., p. 292), which comes down to the latter end of the eleventh century. But this proves nothing more than that some additions have been made to the original work of Cormac, as has been the case with regard to numbers of historical works, particularly those written in the middle ages."

Fol. 115. A list of the kings of Dal Araidhe, which is followed by a list of the Christian kings of Ireland, down to Maelseachlainn II., who died in 1022.

Fol. 116, a., col. 2. A list of the Christian kings of Connacht.

Fol. 119, a., col. 3. A list of the kings of Aileach.

At the bottom of this folio the scribe writes,

"Ḃach ní féomaiz o'fagbair 'pa penlebur .i. a Saltair Cairil atá agann 'pa leabap ro na Ráda."

i. e. "Everything we could find in the old book, i. e. the Saltair Chaisil, we have [preserved] in this book of the Rath."

From thence down to fol. 146 would appear to have been taken from a different MS.

It is quite evident from the notices in this MS. that the Saltair Chaisil was not then perfect, and that even of what was then transcribed from it the Bodleian MS. contains but a small fragment. It affords no evidence whatever as to Leabhar na g-Ceart, except the fact that the Psalter of Caiseal, in which a certain form of it must have been preserved, was continued down to about the year 1020.

Of the Will of Cathair Mor, and other pieces introduced into Leabhar na g-Ceart.

THE rights of the king of Leinster are introduced by a piece which is called the Will of Cathair Mor. It has no apparent connexion with the Book of Rights, save that some of the principal tribes of Leinster descended from the sons of Cathaeir, and that the rights and stipends of those descendants are treated of. Cathaeir was monarch of Ireland in the second century, and it was one of the great glories of the Leinstermen, that their kings had held that station. At a much later period Diarmaid Mac Murchadha (Dermot Mac Murrough) in haranguing his Leinster troops, is reported to have said, in reference to king Rudhraidhe O'Conchobhair (Roderick O'Conor): "Sed si Laginiam quærit, quoniam alicui Connactensium aliquando subiecta fuit: eâ ratione et nos Connactiam petimus quia nostris aliquoties cum totius Hiberniæ subdita fuerat monarchiâ."—Hibernia Expugnata, Dist., c. viii.

The king of Caiseal's right to be king of all Ireland is stated in our text (pp. 28, 51, 52, infra), as to which, and the controversy on the subject, we have already said so much (pp. xiii.—xvii.) So are the rights of the kings of Aileach (pp. 125, 127, 129) and of Teamhair (p. 177), to be monarch, i. e. the rights of the northern and southern Ui Neill. A similar recognition is given to the king of Laighin (p. 205).

Of the will of Cathaeir Mor, in the shape in which it has been edited, there are extant three copies on vellum, i. e. besides those inserted in our two copies of the Book of Rights, there is another in what is called the Book of Leinster, or Leabhar Laighneach (Leacan, fol. 92), with which the text of the present edition has been compared. Besides these we have another vellum copy, or, we might say, another will, in the Book of Baile an Mhuta (Ballymote), fol. 74, a. b. It is very different from the text which we have adopted, but evidently less authentic, being longer, and very verbose and rhapsodical. There is also a paper copy in the O'Gorman collection, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy. It is in the handwriting of Peter O'Connell, who made a translation of it into English for the use of O'Gorman, who prided himself on his descent from this great monarch. This copy, which professes to have been taken from the Book of Gleann Da Loch (Glendalough), accords in arrangement with the copy in B., but it appears, from some verbal differences, that it was not taken from it. The copy consulted by O'Flaherty, Ogygia, p. iii. c. 59, was different from any of these.

This will has been mentioned by O'Flaherty and most modern writers on Irish history, as an authentic document contemporaneous with the testator. See p. 192. But the Editor is of opinion that it was drawn up in the present form some centuries after the death of Cathair Mor, when the race of his more illustrious sons had definite territories in Leinster. Whether there was an older form of this will, or whether it was committed to writing in Cathair's own time, are questions which the Editor is not prepared to settle.

The Editor does not know of any copy of the Benedictio Patricii, save those from which our text has been printed (p. 234). But there is in Leabhar Breac (fol. 14, b. a.) a blessing of the saint on Munster, which bears some resemblance to that here given.

Dubhthach Mac Ui Lughair, the author of poems quoted at p. 236, is noticed by O'Reilly in his Chronological Account of the Irish Writers under the year 433, where it is stated that he was the poet and druid of Laeghaire, monarch of Ireland, at the commencement of St. Patrick's mission, and that he was converted to Christianity by that apostle. The reader will there find some account of him and his writings. But O'Reilly there assumes that the poem in the Book of Rights, commencing Teamaip teacá a m-bi mac Cunn, is ascribed to Dubhthach; and he says that some doubts may be reasonably entertained that this poem is the production of Dubhthach. But nothing is found in our text ascribing the poem in question to him. The copy in the Book of Baile an Mhuta says that it was found in the Psalter of Caiseal.

A poet, Lughair, is named and quoted at p. 204, and called Úán fáil, or full poet.

On the References to Tomar^a as King or Prince of the Galls of Dublin.

WE have reserved to this place a discussion upon these very curious references, and they appear to us worthy of a separate consideration, as the investigation may lead to fix the exact period at which the Norse or Danish tribes settled in Dublin.

In Mr. Lindsay's View of the Coinage of Ireland, where a great deal of information respecting the succession of the Hiberno-Danish kings of Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford is collected, nothing is found with regard to the name Tomar. The royal pedigree is traced up to the brothers Amlaf I. 853, 870, and Imar or Ifars I. 870, 872, but no higher.

In our work (at page 40) the monarch, in making a circuit of Ireland, arrives at the entrenched Ath Cliath (Dublin), where, it is stated, he is entitled to a month's refectation, ó maicib Tomair, from Tomar's chieftains, and to have the king of the bounteous ford (Ath Cliath), to accompany him to the Leinstermen, viz., to Liamhain (Dunlavan).

The Galls of Dublin, within the jurisdiction of the kings of Laighin or Leinster, were liable to pay heavy tribute to him, pp. 218-220, and on the other hand the stipends of the king of Leinster to them for their services were also large. These are said to be payable oo thupc Thomair, to the prince Tomar.

The Four Masters, under the year 942, quote some lines, from which it would appear that "Race of Tomar," was a kind of patronymic for the Galls, foreigners, or Danes of Dublin.

^a Pages 40 and 220, infra.

“Ro κορρεραὸ Ἀθι Cliath claiðbeach co n-ιματ ρειατ ρεο τεαγλαδ;
 πο κραδεαὸ Μυμτιρ Τομαρ, ι n-ιαρεαρ δομαιν, δεβραδ.

“Ath Cliath of swords was plundered
 Of many shields and families;
 The Race of Tomar were tormented
 In the western world, it has been manifested.”

The earliest reference to a Danish prince Tomar occurring in the Irish annals is at the year 847, where the Annals of Ulster contain the following notice of a Danish prince Tomrair, which is decidedly the same name as Tomar:

“A. D. 847. Κατ ρε Μαελρεχναλλ πορ γενντι ι Φοραγ, ιn quo ceciderunt ρεττ εετ. Bellum ρε n-Olchoδυρ, ρι Μυμαν, acυρ ρε Λοργάν mac Ceallaig co Λαιγνυ occ Sciaτ Nechtan ιn quo ceciderτ Τομραρ^v Erell, ταναρρε ριγ Λαιτλιννε, acυρ δά εετ δεε ιmbι.”

Thus rendered in the old translation of these Annals preserved in the Library of the British Museum. Clarend. tom. 49. Ayscough, 4795.

“A. D. 847. A battle by Maelsechnaill vpon the Gentyes” [i. e. Gentiles or Pagan Danes] “at Fora, where 700 fell. Bellum by Ollchovar, king of Mounster, and Lorgan mac Cellai into Leinster [rectè, with the Leinstermen] vpon Gentiles at Sciah Nechtan, where fell Tomrair Erell, the next or second in power to the king of Laihlin, and 1200 about him.”

The same events are recorded by the Four Masters, under the year 846, as follows:

“Ἄοιρ Ὀριουρ, 846. Καὲ πραιομὸς γία Μαιλεαχλαϊνν μακ Μαιλρुानαϊδ̃ φορ γαλλαϊν̃ ἰ φοραϊγ̃ ου̃ ἢ πο μαρβαδ̃ ου̃. c. λαϋ̃ ο̃ιοβ̃.

“The age of Christ 846. A battle was gained by Maelseachlainn, the son of Maelruanaidh over the Galls [Danes] at Forach, where seven hundred of them were slain by him.

“Another battle [was gained] by Olchobhar, king of Munster, and by Lorcan, the son of Ceallach, king of Leinster, with the Leinstermen and Munstermen about them, over the Danes at Sciath Neachtain, where Tomrair Erla, Tanist of the king of Lochlann, was slain, and twelve hundred about him.”

It will appear from a passage in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 994, that this earl or prince's ring, and the sword of Carlus, his contemporary, were preserved in Dublin, from which, coupled with the references^x in Leabhar na g-Ceart, and the poem cited

^w Tomrair.—Dr. O'Conor prints this Tonirair, and the name is so written in the MS. copy made for the Chev. O'Gorman, now in the Royal Irish Academy.

^x This argument is much strengthened by the fact that Tomar is called τορς in Leabhar na g-Ceart, see page 206. This term, which is also written ορς is explained “a king's son” in Cormac's Glossary, and by Michael O'Clery. Torc Tomar of Ath Cliath is then clearly the Tomrar, Earl, Tanist of the king of Lochlann, who was killed at Sciath Neachtain, in 847, and whose chain or ring was preserved at Dublin, in 994. The pedigree of Imhar, the ancestor of the Danish kings of Dublin, is given in none of the Genealogical Irish works hitherto discovered; and in the absence of direct evidence it is reasonable to assume that, as the Danes of Dublin had his ring or chain in 994, this ring or chain descended to them as an heir-loom from him; and as they are called Muintir Thomair, in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the

by the Four Masters at the year 942, it may be inferred with much certainty that this Tomar or Tomrar was the ancestor of the Danish kings of Dublin, and very probably the father of Amhlaif and Imhar, the first of these kings, by whom his sword was preserved. The passage is as follows:

“The age of Christ 994. The ring of Tomar and the sword of Carlus were carried off by Maelseachlainn^y, the son of Domhnall, by force, from the Galls of Ath Cliath (Dublin).”

This Tomar is clearly the Erla and Tanist of the king of Lochlann, slain at Sciath Neachtain in the year 847; and Carlus, whose sword was carried away by Maelseachlainn, was the son of Amlaff I., king of Dublin, and the person who was killed in the battle of Cill Ua n-Daighre (Killoderry) in the year 866, as thus recorded by the Four Masters:

“Αοιρ Cριορτ 866. Φλανο μακ Cοναηγ τιγεαρνα θρεγ υιλε, δο ειονολ Φεαρ m-θρεαξ, Ζαιγεν, αγυρ γαλλ, σο Cill Ua n-Θαιγρε, κύιγ μίλε λιον α ροεραυε ινο αχχαιδ αν ριςσh Αοδα Φιννλερε. year 942, it may be further inferred that they were also his descendants; for if we examine the Irish tribe-names to which Muintir is prefixed, we will find that the second part of the compound is the name of the progenitor, as Muintir Maemordha, Muintir Murchadha, Muintir Eoluis, Muintir Chionaetha, &c., which were the tribe-names of the O'Reillys, O'Flahertys, Mac Rannalls, and Mac Kinaws, all of whom descended respectively from the ancestors whose names enter into the latter part of the tribe names. The word Muintir is, however, now more extensive in its application, and means people or family.

^y Maelseachlainn, called Malachy II. monarch of Ireland. This entry is the theme on which Moore founded his ballad,

“Let Erin remember the days of old.”

“The age of Christ 866. Flann, the son of Conaing, lord of all Breagh, collected the men of Breagh, Laighin, and the Galls, to Cill Ua η-Daighre, five thousand being the number of his force, against the king Aedh Finnliath. Aedh had but one thousand only, together with Conchobhar, son of Tadhg, king of Connacht. The battle was vigorously and earnestly fought between them, and at length the victory was gained through dint of fighting and conflict over the men of Breagh, over Laighin, and over the Galls, who were slaughtered, and great numbers of the Galls were slain in that battle. In it fell Flann, son of Conaing, lord of Breagh, and Diarmaid, son of Eidersceal, lord of Loch Gabhair²; and Carlus, son of Amblaibh, son of the lord of the Galls. There fell on the other side, in the heat of the conflict, Fachtna, son of Maelduin, prince of the north (i. e. of Aileach). Mannachan, lord of Ui Briuin na Sionna was he who killed Flann, of which was said:

name Logore to this day. See Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. i. p. 424, Mr. Wilde's Account of Antiquities found there.

“Great the victory for Mannachan,
 For the hero of fierce valour,

 To exhibit it before the face of the son of Tadhg.”

There was another Tomar or Tamar at Limerick about a century later. He is mentioned in the work called Cogadh Gall fri Gaedh-alaibh (an important and curious tract, the publication of which has been contemplated by the Irish Archæological Society), under the name of Tamar Mac Elgi. In the copy of that work preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2, 17, p. 359, he is said to have come with a royal great fleet, some time after the death of the monarch Niall Glun-dubh, who was slain in the year 916, and to have put in at Inis Sibtond, at Limerick. The same person is mentioned in Mageoghegan's translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, under the year 922, where the following strange passage occurs:

“A. D. 922. Tomrair Mac Alchi, king of Denmarck, is reported to go [to have gone] to hell with his pains, as he deserved.”

This is evidently the Tamar mac Elgi of H. 2, 17.

The name Tomar and Tomrar became common as the proper name of a man among the Gaeidhil or Milesian Irish in the tenth and eleventh centuries, like Maghnus, Raghnaill, Amhlaeibh, Imhar, and other Danish names; and a family of the Cineal Eoghain took the surname of O'Tomhraid from an Irishman who was baptized by the name of Tomhraid from his mother's people. This family were seated near Lough Swilly, in the county of Donegal, where they built a family church, called from their surname Cill O'Tomhraid, i. e. church of the O'Tomhraid. This family still remains in many places in the province of Ulster, reduced, and obscure, and disguised under the anglicized name of Toner or Tonry.

Of the Tract prefixed to the Book of Rights, entitled " Geasa agus Buadha Riogh Eireann."

THE Tract on the Geasa and Urghartha, and the Buadha and Adha,—i. e., as we have rendered the words, the Restrictions and Prohibitions, and the Prerogatives of the Kings of Eire or Ireland,—is curious for the glimpses which it affords into the notions that prevailed in this country in the eleventh century, in the time of Cuan O'Lochain.

Cuan O'Leochan or O'Lothchain, as he is sometimes called, or, as the name is more generally spelt, O'Lochain, was chief poet to Maelseachlainn (Malachy) II., monarch of Ireland, who died in 1022. After the death of this monarch there was an interregnum of twenty years, and we are informed that Cuan O'Lochain and Corcran Cleireach were appointed governors of Ireland; but Cuan did not long enjoy this dignity, for he was slain in Teabhtha (Teffia), A. D. 1024. Mr. Moore states, in his History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 147, that " for this provisional government of Cuan he can find no authority in any of our regular annals;" and it is certain that no authority for it is found in any of the original Irish annals, nor even in the Annals of the Four Masters; but the fact is stated as follows in Mageoghegan's translation of the " Annals of Clonmacnoise" [Cluain mic Nois], a work which professes to be a faithful version of the original, although in some instances it has been obviously interpolated by the translator.

" A. D. 1022. After the death of king Moyliseaghlyn, this kingdom was without a king twenty years, during [a portion of] which time the realm was governed by two learned men, the one called Cwan O'Lochan, a well learned temporall man and chiefe poet of Ireland, the other Corcran Cleireagh, a devoute and holy man that was [chief] anchorite of all Ireland, whose most abideing was at Lismore. The land was governed like a free state and not like a monarchie by them.

“A. D. 1024. Cuan O’Loghan, prime poet of Ireland, a great chronicler, and one to whom, for his sufficiency, the causes of Ireland were committed to be examined and ordered, was killed by one of the land of Teaffa; after committing of which evill fact there grew an evill scent and odour of the party that killed him, that he was easily known among the rest of the land. His associate Corkran lived yett, and survived him for a long time after.”

The death of Cuan O’Lochain is also recorded by Tighearnach, who died in the year 1088, and who may have seen him in his youth. His death is also entered in the Dublin and Bodleian copies of the Annals of Ulster as follows:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan h-Ua Coḃcán pḃmḃiceḃ Eḃḃn do ḃapḃad t (o)-ḃeḃḃa d’ ḃeapḃib ḃeabḃa ḃeḃn: ḃḃeḃaiz a n-aen uap in luḃt ro ḃapḃ: ḃiḃe ḃile ḃḃeḃm.”

Thus translated by Dr. O’Conor, who has sadly mangled, if not falsified, many curious passages in the Irish annals:

“Cuan O Lothcan, pḃeapḃuus sapiens Hiberniæ occisus in Teffia. Judicium vāh cecidit in eos qui eum occiderunt.”

But the old translator of the Annals of Ulster, who was infinitely better acquainted with the Irish language than Dr. O’Conor, paraphrases it as follows, evidently from a text different from the two above referred to:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan O’Lochan, archpoet of Ireland [was] killed treacherously by the men of Tehva, ancestors of [the] Foxes; they stunk after, whereby they got the name of Foxes, a miracle shewed of the poet.”

The notice of the killing of him, and the consequent visitation upon the murderers, is thus given in the Annals of Kilronan:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan Ua Lóráin .i. prími-éigepp Eirenn, oo marbáid la Teépa. Do rigne Dia firte fileó co follur ar an luét ro marb, óir ro bárraigeó a n-orpho-oigeó iad, γ ní ro h-aónaiceó a (γ)-cuirp gur fóguil foel γ foluamam iad.

“A. D. 1024. Cuan Ua Lochain, chief poet of Ireland, was killed by the Teffians. God wrought a miracle for the poet manifestly upon the party who killed him, for they met their deaths in a tragical manner, and their bodies were not interred until the wolves and birds preyed upon them.”

For a brief account of the poems ascribed to O’Lochain the reader is referred to O’Reilly’s Irish Writers, pp. 73, 74. The first poem there mentioned has since been published in Petrie’s Antiquities of Tara Hill, Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xviii. pp. 143.

Charles O’Conor of Belanagare, in an anonymous pamphlet written by him in 1749, against Sir Richard Cox’s Appeal on the Behaviour of Dr. Charles Lucas, writes as if he had in his possession some MSS. of Cuan O’Lochain. It appears from the Memoirs of his Life and Writings, written by his grandson, the late Dr. Charles O’Conor, p. 211, that Mr. O’Conor would never have acknowledged this pamphlet to be his production, were it not that his correspondence with Reilly, the publisher of it, obliged him to acquiesce. In this pamphlet Mr. O’Conor says:

“What I have advanced on this subject I have extracted from our ancient MSS., the only depositories of the form of our ancient constitution, and particularly from the MSS. of Cuan O’Loghan, who administered the affairs of Ireland on the death of Malachy II. Anno Domini 1022.”

Having premised thus much with regard to the author of the poem, we may now say something as to the subject of the tract; and first of the words used.

Ἐερα: in the Sing., Nom. ἕειρ, Gen. ἕειρε (fem).—This word is in common use in the sense of conjuration or solemn vow; κυριμν ρά ἕεραυῖ ἔύ, “I conjure thee,” is a common saying.—See tale of Deirdre, in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Dublin, p. 23, where O’Flanagan translates it “solemn vow,” and “injunctions,” in a note on the word. In this tract, however, the word is clearly used to denote “anything or act forbidden, because of the ill luck which would result from its doing:” “Aruspex vetuit ante brumam aliquid novi negotii accipere.”—Terence. It also means a spell or charm.

It is used here as the opposite or antithesis of βυαῖα, and synonymous with Ἐρηρεῖα: O’Reilly gives a word Ἐρηρετ (s. m.), which he explains, “bad luck, misfortune, fatality;” but this word is rather to be formed from the verbal noun Ἐρηρεῖαῖ (mas.), signifying prohibition, interdiction, hindrance; see also ερηρεῖαῖ, in O’Clerigh’s Glossary of ancient Irish words. It is used here as the antithesis of ἰαῖα.

Ἰυαῖα: in the Sing. βυαῖ (fem.) This is still the living Irish word for victory. When applied to plants or herbs in medical MSS. it denotes virtue, power, &c. See the Battle of Magh Rath, pp. 84, 85, 280, where the three victories or remarkable events of the battle are called τρη βυαῖα ν ἄττα; and see p. 239, infra, where it is translated “gift”.

Ἰαῖα: in the Sing., Nom. ἰαῖ, Gen. ἰαῖα (mas.) In a MS. in Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 18, this is explained by βυαῖ, and it is evidently here used instead of it: the things which will insure good luck and success. The word ἰαῖ is still used in every part of Ireland to denote good luck or success.

Whether the customs and popular beliefs or superstitions, recorded in this poem, had ever been drawn up into a code before O’Lochain’s time, it would now be difficult to determine; but we find a collection of the kind in the concluding piece of Leabhar na g-Ceart (infra, p. 238, &c.), where some of the prohibitions are identical with O'Lochain's. Many of those matters are clearly of Pagan origin, and the reference to the king of Leinster drinking by the light of wax candles in the palace of Dinn Riogh, shows that the poet considered some of these customs as in existence from the most remote period of Irish history, as the kings of Leinster had not resided at Dinn Riogh since the introduction of Christianity, for they deserted it for Nas (Naas) at a very remote period. The prohibition, "that the sun should not find him in his couch at Teamhair," has also reference to a period many centuries anterior to O'Lochain's time; for the monarchs of Ireland had not resided at Teamhair or Tara since about the year 565, when it was cursed by St. Ruadhan, or Rodanus, of Lothra. See MS. Trin. Col. Dub., H. 1. 15, and Vita Sancti Rodani in the Codex Kilkenniensis, now preserved in Marsh's Library, Class v. 3, Tab. i. No. 4, F., and as published by the Bollandists at 25th April; and see also Connell Mageoghegan's translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, MS. Trin. Col. Dub., F. 3. 19, p. 45, and Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 101-103. Its abandonment is also mentioned in the Danish work called the Konungs-Skuggsio quoted in Johnstone's Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 287. From these facts it is quite obvious that some of those customs were regarded by the poet as derived from the most remote periods, and that the observance of them in his own time was reckoned absolutely necessary to the welfare of the monarch and the provincial kings.

We recollect little in Irish history to guide us to the origin of many of the curious restrictions here recorded; but it is quite obvious that some of them have arisen from precaution, others from a recollection of mischances. Look at the following restrictions of the monarch of Ireland:

To alight on a Wednesday in Magh Breagh; to traverse Magh Cuil-linn after sunset; to incite his horse at Fan-Chomair; to go on Tuesday into North Teabhtha; to go on a ship upon the water the day after Bealltaine (May day).

Such restrictions are not without parallels in the observances of other nations, and there are many maxims of a similar kind known to prevail even among wealthy classes in the present day, to an extent that is seldom acknowledged. The prohibition against beginning any new undertaking on a Friday is quite a geis of the class mentioned in our text. The prohibition against sitting down to dinner, thirteen at table, is particularly remarkable, and every shift is commonly made to avoid or escape from it, with a real apprehension that, if the fatal number be complete, one of the party will surely die within the twelvemonth. So the prohibition that the bridegroom's mother shall not go to church with the bridal party is strictly submitted to; she must not be present at the marriage ceremony anywhere—at church or at home; and though the parties concerned be in the habit of calling such beliefs “superstitious,” yet, when it comes to the point in this matter in their own case, it will be found that the geis will not be violated.

Addison, in the Spectator, has a paper relevant to this point, in which he adduces curious instances of English superstitions, and tracts of the present day are not wanting, giving particular evidence on the same subject.

Observances of a like nature were common among the Pagan nations of what is considered classical antiquity, as we learn from their writers:

“*Sæpè malum hoc nobis, si mens non læva fuisset, De cælo tactas memini prædicere quercus.
Sæpe sinistra cavâ prædixit ab ilice cornix.*”—Virg. Eclog. i. 16.

“Ipsa dies alios alio dedit ordine Luna Felices operum: quintam fuge; pallidus Orcus

Eumenidesque satæ ; tum partu Terra nefando Cœumque Iapetumque creat, sævumque Typhœa, Et conjuratos cœlum rescindere fratres."—Id. Georg. i. 280.

The origin of the adha or buadha may be similarly accounted for. Some of them savour strongly of Pagan notions.

On the Division of the Year among the ancient Irish.

As the seasons of the year are frequently mentioned in this book, it will be well here to add a few words on the divisions of the year among the ancient Irish. Dr. O'Conor has attempted to show, in his Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores, Epistola Nuncupatoria, lxxi. et seq., and in the Stowe Catalogue, vol. i. p. 32 : 1. That the year of Pagan Irish was luni-solar, consisting, like that of the Phœnicians and Egyptians, of 365 days and six hours : 2. That it was divided by them, as it is at present into four ratha or quarters, known by the names of Samh-ratha, Foghmhar-ratha, Geimh-ratha, and Iar-ratha, now corruptly Earrach, or summer, autumn, winter, and spring ; the first of these quarters commencing at the vernal equinox, the second at the summer solstice, the third at the autumnal equinox, and the fourth at the winter solstice ; 3. That at the beginning of each of these ratha a religious festival was celebrated, but that the periods when they were celebrated were changed by the early Christians, to agree with the Christian festivals, and to obliterate the recollection of the origin of the Pagan rites which they were not able utterly to abolish. That such a change was made he infers from a passage occurring in all the old Lives of St. Patrick, which states that Patrick lighted the Paschal fire at Slane in 433, at the same time that King Laeghaire was celebrating the festival of Bealltaine at Teamhair ; which would be fair enough if the fire were called Bealltaine by any of Patrick's ancient biographers; but it is not, and therefore Dr. O'Connor's inference wants the vis consequentiæ. In the oldest Life of St. Patrick extant, namely, that by Mocutenius, preserved in the Book of Armagh, the fire lighted by the king of Teamhair, and Patrick's Paschal fire, are mentioned as follows :

“Contigit verò in illo anno, idolatriæ sollempnitatem quam gentiles incantationibus multis, et magicis inventionibus, nonnullis aliis idolatriæ superstitionibus, congregatis etiam regibus, satrapis, ducibus, principibus, et optimatibus populi, insuper et magis, incantatoribus, aurspicibus, et omnis artis omnisque doli inventoribus doctoribusque vocatis ad Loigaireum, velut quondam ad Nabodonossor regem, in Temoriâ, istorum Babylone, exercere consuêrant, eâdem nocte quâ Sanctus Patricius Pasca, illi illam adorarent exercentque festivitatem gentilem.

“Erat quoque quidam mos apud illos per edictum omnibus intimatus ut quicumque in cunctis regionibus sive procul, sive juxtâ, in illâ nocte incendissent ignem, antequam in domu regiâ, id est, in palatio Temoriæ, succenderetur, periret anima ejus de populo suo.

“Sanctus ergo Patricius Sanctum Pasca celebrans, incendit divinum ignem valdè lucidum et benedictum, qui in nocte refulgens, a cunctis penè plani campi habitantibus vissus est.”—Book of Armagh, fol. 3, b.

It is also stated in the Leabhar Breac as follows:

“Ἐτίε Πατριαί ιαρ ριν κυ Ἐρτα ἔερ Ἐεicc. Ἀδανταρ τεμιό occa ιρ ιν μωδ ριν Ἐρcor na Cár. Ἐργαιθερ ζοεγαίρε ód chí ιν τεμιό, ár ba h-ίριν γειρ Tempach oc Ἰοεδελιυῖ; ocup ní lámaó nech tenió ó'ρατόδ ι η-ειρυνó ιρ μωδ lou ριν, no cy η-αδαντα h-ι Tempaiğ ar τάρ ιρ ιν ρollaíαν.”—Fol. 14, a 1.

“Patrick goes afterwards to Fearta Fear Feicc. A fire is kindled by him at that place on Easter eve. Laeghaire is enraged as he sees the fire, for that was the geis [prohibition] of Teamhair among the Gaedhhlil; and no one dared to kindle a fire in Ireland on that day until it should be first kindled at Teamhair at the solemnity.”

Now, however these two passages may seem to support Dr. O’Conor’s inference, it is plain that the fire lighted at Teamhair is not called Bealltaine in either of them. It should be also added that it is not so called in any of the Lives of Patrick. According to a vellum MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3. 17, p. 732, the fire from which all the hearths in Ireland was supplied was lighted at Tlachtgha [at Athboy] in the Munster portion of Meath, and not on the first of May, but on the first of November; while, according to Keating, the author of the Dinnseanchus, and others, the fire called Bealltaine was lighted at Uisneach, in the Connacht portion of Meath, on the first of May, which for that reason is called La Bealltaine to the present day. The probability then is, that the fire lighted at Teamhair, on Easter eve, A. D. 433, was not the Bealltaine, but some other fire, and it is stated in the second life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, that it was the Feis Teamhrach, or Feast of Teamhair, that Laeghaire and his satraps were celebrating on this occasion; while the author of the Life of St. Patrick in the Book of Lismore, asserts that Laeghaire was then celebrating the festival of his own nativity, which appears to have been the truth, and if so it was not the regular septennial Feis^a, which met after Samhain, but one convened to celebrate the king’s birth-day. From these notices it is quite clear that O’Conor’s inference, that the Bealltaine was lighted on the 21st of March by the Pagan Irish, is not sustained. In the accounts given of the Bealltaine of L., p. 22, though the other reading there in B. makes it every fifth year, p. 273, n. 96. See also the poem, p. 240, infra, where both copies, L. & B., have cach peach̄τ̄μ̄αδ̄σ̄σ̄μ̄ σᾱμ̄ νᾱ, i. e. every seventh Samhain.

in Cormac's Glossary, and in H. 3. 18, p. 596, as quoted in Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, no time is specified for the lighting of it, nor could we be able from them, or from any other written evidence yet discovered, to decide in what season it was lighted, were it not that the first of May is still universally called in Irish La Bealltaine. But Dr. O'Connor argues that this name was applied in Pagan times to the 21st of March, and that it was transferred to the first of May by the early Christians, to agree with a Christian festival. This, however, is contrary to the tradition which still prevails in many parts of Ireland, namely, that the fires lighted in Pagan times, on the first of May, were transferred by St. Patrick to the 24th of June, in honor of St. John the Baptist, on the eve of whose festival they still light bonfires in every county in Ireland, and not on the first of May, except in Dublin, where they continue to light them on the 1st of May also. The observances still practised on May-day (which have no connexion whatever with Christianity) and the traditions preserved in the country respecting it, found a strong argument that it must have been a Pagan festival, while the 21st of March is not remarkable for any observances. The same may be observed of Samhain, the 1st of November, on which, according to all the Irish authorities, the Druidic fires were lighted at Tlachtgha. The Editor is, therefore, convinced that Dr. O'Connor has thrown no additional light on the division of the year among the Pagan Irish, for his conjecture respecting the agreement of the Paschal fire of St. Patrick with the Bealltaine of the Pagan Irish is visionary, inasmuch as it is stated in the second life by Probus that it was the Feis Teamhrach that Laeghaire was then celebrating. The words are given in very ancient Irish, as follows, by the original author, who wrote in the Latin language: "Iꝛ iꝛ inð amꝛ iꝛ iꝛ am do iugneðh feiꝛ Tempaohi la Zoegaꝛe mac Neill ꝛ la fiꝛu Eipeann," i. e. "It is in that time indeed that the Feis Temh- radhi was made by Loegaire, son of Niall, and by the men of Eire."— See Colgan's Trias Thaum., pp. 15, 20.

The fact seems to be that we cannot yet determine the season with which the Pagan Irish year commenced. As to Dr. O'Connor making earrach, the spring, the last quarter, because, in his opinion, it is compounded of iar and ratha, postrenus anni cursus, it can have no weight in the argument, because there is not the slightest certainty that this is the real meaning of the term, for in Cormac's Glossary the term is explained urughadh, i. e. refreshing, or renewing, and it is conjectured that it is cognate with the Latin ver: it may be added that it is almost identical with the Greek ἔαρ, ἔαρος.

That the Pagan Irish divided the year into four quarters is quite evident from the terms Earrach, Samhradh, Foghmhar, and Geimhridh, which are undoubtedly ancient Irish words, not derived from the Latin through Christianity; and that each of these began with a stated day, three of which days are still known, namely, Bealltaine, otherwise called Ceideamhain, or beginning of summer (see p. 20, infra), when they lighted fires at Uisneach, in the beginning of Samhradh; Lughnasadh, the games of Lughaidh Lamh-fhada, which commenced at Taillte on the first day of Foghmhar, the harvest; and Samhain, i. e. Samh-fhuin, or summer-end, when they lighted fires at Tlachtgha. The beginning of Earrach, the spring, was called Oimeic, which is derived from oi, ewe, and meic, milk, because the sheep began to yeau in that season, but we have not found that any festival was celebrated.

In a MS. in the Library of the British Museum (Harleian MSS., H. I. B., No. 5280, p. 38), the names of the days with which the seasons commenced are given in the following order:

“O Samhuan co h-Oimeic, h-o Oimeic co ðelaine, h-o ðelaine co ðron-troghain,” i. e. “from Samhsuan to Oimeic, from Oimeic to Beltine, from Beltine to Bron-troghain.” And the following explanations are then given by way of gloss:

“Samhain dno .i. sam̃f̃uin .i. fuin in τ-rampaid̃ ann, ar ip̃ de roinn no b̃id̃ for an m-plead̃aim ano .i. in ram̃paid̃ õ d̃eiltime co Sam̃f̃uin, acur in d̃eim̃ped̃ õ Sam̃f̃uin co d̃eiltime,” i. e. “Samhain, i. e. Samh-fhuin, i. e. the end of Samradh [summer] is in it, for the year was divided into two parts, i. e. the Samradh, from Beltine to Samfhuin, and the Geimhredh, from Samfhuin to Beltine.”

A similar explanation of Sam̃f̃uin is given in H. 3. 18, p. 596, and in O’Clery’s Glossary.

Oimelc is derived from imne-folc, and explained ταιθε an eap-ραϊζ, i. e. the beginning of Spring, or from oi-melc, sheep-milk: “Ip̃ h̃i aip̃ip̃ ip̃ip̃enn a τicc ar̃ caeip̃iuc̃ acur i m-bleaz̃aur̃ coip̃ic̃h,” i. e. “This is the time when the milk of sheep comes, and when sheep are milked.” In Peter O’Connell’s MS. Dictionary, oimelc is also written imbulc, and explained Feil̃ d̃riζ̃oe, i. e. St. Bridget’s festival, 1st February, which day has for many centuries been called La Feile Brighde, the older name being obsolete.

Beltine, the name of the first day of summer, is thus explained:

“d̃eiltime .i. bil̃ time .i. zenẽ ip̃im̃ech .i. d̃ã c̃eneõ dõ g̃ñid̃ir̃ la h-aep̃p̃ p̃ẽc̃ai no op̃ũi cõ t̃incẽt̃iãb̃ m̃orãb̃, γ dõ lecd̃ir̃ nã cẽp̃rã ẽt̃ap̃rae ar̃ t̃ẽom̃annãb̃ cẽchã bliad̃ona; nõ d̃eiltime; d̃el̃ dim̃ anñ d̃ẽ l̃d̃ail; ip̃ anñ dõ[τ]ar̃ p̃el̃b̃cĩ oim̃ẽ g̃ãc̃ã cẽp̃rã for̃ p̃el̃b̃ d̃eil.”

“Beltine, i. e. biltine, i. e. lucky fire, i. e. two fires which used to be made by the lawgivers or druids, with great incantations, and they used to drive the cattle between them [to guard] against the diseases of each year. Or Bel-dine; Bel was the name of an idol god. It was on it [i. e. that day] that the firstling of every kind of cattle used to be exhibited as in the possession of Bel.” See a similar passage quoted in Petrie’s Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 60.

Bron-troghain, the name of the first day of the next season is explained Lughnasadh [Lammas], i. e. “Ταιθε̃ Foz̃am̃ar̃ .i. ip̃ anõ dõ βρομε τροζαν .ι. ταλαή πο έοιρέιρ. Τροζαν οιν ανημ δο έταλην," i. e. "the beginning of Foghamhar, i. e. in it Troghan brings forth, i. e. the earth under fruits. Troghan, then, is a name for the earth."

In the Book of Lismore, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, (fol. 189, a) μηρ τροζαν is explained, ζυζηναρα, Lammas.

In Cormac's Glossary (as we have already intimated), ερραό, the spring, is explained υπυζαό, i. e. refreshing, and derived from the Latin ver; but it is much more like the Greek εαρος.

Σαήραό is thus explained in Cormac's Glossary:

"Σαήραό, quari ραή ιρ ηδ Εβρα ρολ ιρ η ζαιτη ηνδε διειτυρ Σαηρον .ι. ρολ εορμ. Σαήραό οιν .ι. ριαό ριζερ Θριαη, γ ιρ ανδ αρ μο δο [έ]αινε α ροιλλε αουρ α η-αιρθε, i. e. Samhradh, quasi sanh in the Hebrew, which is sol in the Latin, unde dicitur Samson, i. e. Sol eorum. Samhradh, then, a riadh, i. e. a course which the sun runs, and it is in it that its light and its height are the most splendid."

In O'Clery's Glossary, the monosyllable sanh is explained by Σαήραό, summer. It is clearly the same word as summer.

In the same Glossary the harvest is defined as the name of the last month, δο'η μηρ δειζεναιζ πο η-ανμηηζεαό, and derived quari Φοζανυρ .ι. ροεα μηρ η-Θαή, the foundation of the month of Ganh or November. It has a close resemblance to, and perhaps the same origin as, the Greek επώρα, for if we prefix the digamma, and aspirate the π, we have Φοφώρα. This, and the relationship of εαρ, εαρος with εαρραό, have never been remarked before.

In Cormac's Glossary, Geimhredh, winter, is conjectured to be from the Greek Gamos (Γάμος), and this conjecture is attempted to be strengthened by the remark, "inde [in eo] veteres mulieres duxerunt!" In the same Glossary, voce Cpocenn, as well as in O'Clery's, the monosyllable ζαή is explained hiems, ζειήραεό, and it is quite evident that this, or ζειή, is the primitive form of the word, and it is cognate with the Welsh gauaf, the Greek $\chiεῖμα$, and the Latin hyems. The probability, therefore, is, that the terminations radh or readh, added to the simple samh and gamh, or geimh, are endings like the er in the Saxon summ-er, wint-er, though there is a possibility that they may be compounded of samh, and gamh or geimh, and re, time. There is not the slightest probability that the terminations rach, radh, ar, readh, in the terms carrach, samradh, foghmar, geimhreadh, are corruptions of ratha, a quarter of a year, as Dr. O'Connor takes for granted.

It might at first sight appear probable that the year of the Pagan Irish began with Oimec, the spring, when the sheep began to yearn and the grass to grow, but this is far from certain; and if there be no error of transcribers in Cormac's Glossary, we must conclude that the last month of Foghamhar, i. e. that preceding Mis Gamh or November, was the end of their summer, and of their year, $\text{Fogamhar .i. do'n m'ig do'igheanaig po h-ammui'gead}$, i. e. Foghamhar, was given as a name to the last month. Since the conversion of the Irish to Christianity they began the year with the month of January, as is clear from the Feilire Aenghuis.

Besides the division of the year into the four quarters, of which we have spoken, and into two equal parts called gam or geim (Welsh gauaf) and ram (Welsh haf), it would appear from a gloss on an ancient Irish law tract in H. 3. 18, p. 13, T. C. D., it was divided into two unequal parts called Samh-fucht [$\tauυϕτ$, i. e. time], or summer-period, and Gamh-fucht or Geimh-fucht, i. e. winter-period; the first comprising five months, namely, the last month of Spring, and the three months of Summer, and the first month of Autumn; and the other the two last months of Autumn, the three months of Winter, and the two first months of Spring. This division was evidently made to regulate the price of grazing lands.

On the Chariots and Roads of the ancient Irish.

THE mention of chariots in this work requires some observations. St. Patrick, according to his Tripartite Life, published by Colgan, visited most parts of Ireland in a chariot. The carbad is also mentioned in the oldest Irish stories and romances, as in the Tain Bo Cuailghe, in which Cuchullainn's carbad (chariots), and his ara, or charioteer, are constantly mentioned. There was a locality at Teamhair or Tara, called Fan na g-Carbat, or slope of the chariot, and it is distinctly stated in the Life of St. Patrick preserved in the Book of Armagh, that the Gentile or Pagan Irish had chariots at Tara before their conversion to Christianity.

According to the ancient Irish annals, and other fragments of Irish history, the ancient Irish had many roads which were cleaned and kept in repair according to law. The different terms used to denote road, among the ancient Irish, are thus defined in Cormac's Glossary, from which a pretty accurate idea may be formed of their nature:

“Ρότ .i. ρουτ .i. ρό-ρέτ .i. μό ολδαρ ρέτ .i. ρεμιτα υνιυρ ανι-μαλιρ. Ατάιτ τρα ιλ-ανμanna φορ conaριβ .i. ρέτ, ρότ, ραμιυτ, ρλιγε, λάμ-ροταε, τυαδ-ροταε, βοζαρ.

“ROT, i. e. ROUT, i. e. RO-SHET [a great set, or path], i. e. greater than a SET. i. e. semíta unius animalis. There are many names upon the roads, i. e. sed, rot, ramhat, slighe, lamh-rotae, tuadh-rotae, bothar:

“SET, imprimis, ut praediximus [i. e. semíta unius animalis].

“ROUT [ro-shet, great path], a chariot goes upon it to the fair; it was made for the horses of a mansion in medium.

“RAMHAT, i. e. wider than a ROT, i. e. an urscur, an open space or street, which is in front of the forts of kings. Every neighbour whose land comes up to it is bound to clean it.

“SLIGHE: for two chariots pass by each other upon it; it was made for the meeting of two chariots, i. e. the chariot of a king and the chariot of a bishop, so that each of them might pass by the other [without touching].

“LAMHROTA, i. e. [it extends] between two slighes, one to the north of a mansion, and the other to the south; it was made for forts and for houses.

“TUAGHROTA [farm road], for the passage of the husbandman, a passage which reaches to a ROT, or a mountain.

“BOTHAR: two cows fit upon it, one lengthwise, the other athwart, and their calves and yearlings fit on it along with them; for if they were behind them the cow that followed would wound them.

“There are three cleanings for each. Three periods at which they are cleaned, i. e. time of horse-racing, time of cuā, time of war. These are the three cleanings, i. e. cleaning of wood [brushwood], of water, of weeds. These are the causes for which they are cleaned: on account of their dirtying of the chariot going on a journey, for dirtying of the horses coming from the fair, &c.”

According to the ancient Irish topographical work, called Dinnseanchus, there were five great roads in Ireland, called by the following names, viz., Slighe Dala, Slighe Asail, Slighe Midhluachra, Slighe Cualann, and Slighe Mor. Lughaidh O’Clerigh, in his poetical controversy with Tadhg Mac Daire, urges in support of the dignity of Conn of the Hundred Battles, the ancestor of the dominant families of Leath Chuinn, that these five roads, which led to the fort of Teamhair, were first discovered on the birth-night of this great monarch, and he is borne out in this assertion by the authority of the Dinnseanchus, though neither of these great authorities, nor O’Flaherty, who reiterates the same wonderful fact (Ogygia, page 314), tells us the meaning of discovering these roads. It may be a bardic mode of recording that these roads were completed by Feidhlimidh the Lawgiver, on the day before Conn was born, and that the people travelled by them on the next day. But old stories of this kind are found among every ancient people, and are worthy of preservation for the historical facts which they envelope. At whatever period these great roads were made, they indubitably existed, and are frequently referred to in Irish historical tales, from which their positions may be pretty accurately determined. Slighe Dala was the great south-western road of Ireland, which extended from the southern side of Tara hill, in the direction of Ossory. Slighe Asail was a western road extending from the hill of Tara in the direction of Loch Uair (Lough Owel), near Mullingar, in Westmeath. A part of this road is distinctly referred to in Leabhar na h-Uidhri, as extending from Dun na n-Airbhedh to the cross at Tigh Lomain. Slighe Midhluachra was a northern road, but nothing has been yet discovered to prove its exact position. Slighe Cualann extended from Tara, in the direction of Dublin and Bray, and Slighe Mor was the great western road, the lie of which is defined by the Eiscir Riada, a line of gravel hills extending from Dublin to Meadhraighe, near the town of Galway. See Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 205, and see the Bealach Duibhlinne mentioned in our work at p. 14.

Besides these great highways there are various others of inferior character mentioned in the Irish annals, and in the bardic histories of Ireland, at an early period. Keating mentions the following: Bealach Cro, Bealach Duin Bolg, Bealach Chonglais, Bealach Dathi, Bealach Gabhrain, Bealach Mughna, Bealach Mor, in Osraidhe [another name for Slighe Dala], Bealach na Luchaide, in North Munster. The following roads are referred to in the Annals of the Four Masters, at various years. The dates are added to such as are mentioned before the English Invasion: Bealach an Chamain, Bealach an Chluainin, Bealach an Chrionaigh, Bealach an Diothruibhe, Bealach an Fhiodhfail, Bealach an Fhothair, Bealach an Mhaighre, Bealach Bodhbha, A. D. 866; Bealach Buidhe an Choirrshleibhe, Bealach Chille Brighde, Bealach Coille na g-Cuiritin, Bealach Chonglais, Bealach Cro, Bealach Duin, Bealach Duin Bolg, A. D. 594; Bealach Duinn Iarainn, Bealach Ele, A. D. 780; Bealach Eochoille, A. D. 1123; Bealach Fedha, A. D. 572; Bealach Fele, A. D. 730; Bealach Gabhrain, A. D. 756; Bealach Guirt an Iubhair, A. D. 1094; Bealach Ithain, Bealach Leachta, A. D. 976; Bealach Lice, A. D. 721; Bealach Mor Muighe Dala, Bealach Mughna, A. D. 903; Bealach Muine na Siride, A. D. 1144; Bealach na Bethighe, Bealach na Fadhbhaighe, Bealach na g-Corr-ghad, Bealach na n-Gamhna, Bealach na h-Urbhron, Bealach natha, A. D. 866; Bealach Ui Mhithidhein, Bothar Mor Cnamhchoille, Bothar na Mac Riogh.

Various other roads are mentioned in the lives of the Irish saints, and in the Irish historical tales, but it would be out of place to dwell further upon the subject in this place. There is, however, one road, the position of which it is necessary to fix before we can determine the boundary between Laighin Tuath-ghabhair and Laighin Deas-ghabhair, or north and south Leinster, namely, that of Gabhair. This seems to have been the name of a road somewhere near Carlow, but its exact position and extent have not as yet been ascertained. The following reference to it in a historical tale preserved in the Book of Leinster, a MS. of the twelfth century, preserved in Lib. Trin. Col. Dub., H. 2. 18, may help to fix its position, or at least direction. The champions conversing are Lughaidh mac na d-tri Con and Conall Cearnach, who are introduced as standing on the banks of the River Liffey:

“Raḡar-ra, ar Ṣuḡaíó, for ḡelac ḡabhruain co n-ḡeḡur for ḡeluc Smechum. Airḡ-ris [i. eirḡ-ris] amne for ḡabuir for Mairḡ Ṣaḡen co comairrem i Mairḡ Airḡer Ros.”—Fol. 78, b.

“I shall go, said Lughaidh, upon Bealach Gabhrúain till I get on Belach Smechuin. Now go thou upon Gabhair on Mairg Laighean, that we may meet on Magh Airgead-Ros.”

Mairg Laighean is the mountain of Sliabh Mairge, Anglicè Slew-margue, a barony on the west side of the Barrow, in the south-east of the Queen's County, across which, doubtlessly, this road extended. Magh Airgead-Ros, where the champions appointed to meet, was the ancient name of a plain on the River Eoir, Anglicè, the Nore, in Ossory; and its position is marked by the fort of Rath Bheathaidh or ḡoir i n-Airḡer-Ror, now Rathveagh, on the Nore.

gold, and every angle was illuminated with precious stones, and a man-bag of woven brass wire. Midir then arranges the fithcheall. ‘Play,’ said Midir. ‘I will not, except for a wager,’ said Eochaidh. ‘What wager shall we stake?’ said Midir, ‘I care not what,’ said Eochaidh. ‘I shall have for thee,’ said Midir, ‘fifty dark grey steeds, if thou win the game.’”

The Editor takes this opportunity of presenting to the reader four different views of the same piece, an ancient chess-man—a king—found in Ireland, which is preserved in the cabinet of his friend, George Petrie, LL.D.; he has never discovered in the Irish MSS. any full or detailed description of a chess-board and its furniture^b, and he is, therefore, unable to prove that pieces of different forms and powers, similar to those among other nations, were used by the Irish, but he is of opinion that they were. From the exact similarity, as well in style as in material, of the original, to those found in the Isle of Lewis, and which have been so learnedly illustrated by Sir Frederick Madden, in an Essay published in volume xxiv. of the Archæologia, the Editor is disposed to believe that the latter may be Irish also, and not Scandinavian, as that eminent antiquary supposed. It would, at all events, seem certain that the Lewis chess-men and Dr. Petrie's are contemporaneous, and belonged to the same people; and no Scandinavian speci-

The Editor takes this opportunity of adding to the note on "swords," p. 32, the following extract from O'Flaherty :

After quoting the passage in Cambrensis, he adds, without any comment: "They wear, likewise, very sharp and long swords, sharp at one side only, wherefore they strike with the side only and not the point."— mens, as far as the Editor knows, have been as yet found, or at least published, which present anything like such a striking identity in character. Dr. Petrie's specimen was given to him about thirty years ago by the late Dr. Tuke, a well-known collector of antiquities and other curiosities in Dublin; and, as that gentleman stated, was found with several others, some years previously, in a bog in the county of Meath.

The feap fióille, or chessman, is also frequently referred to in old tales, as in the very ancient one called Tain bo Cuailgne, in which the champion Cuchullainn is represented as killing a messenger, who had told him a lie, with a feap fióille:

“Ἰα ἀνοβοὶ Cuchullainn oc imbirte fióille ocup Zoeḡ mac Riangaabhrae a aypa féyn. Ir som cuitebuó-ya on, op ré, oo bepta bréc im naé meapraige. Zapóam oo léci dia fepaib fióilli oon techtaipe co mboi fop lár a mcinne.”

“Cuchullainn and his own charioteer, Loegh, son of Riangaabhra, were then playing chess. ‘It was to mock me,’ said he, ‘thou hast told a lie about what thou mistakest not.’ With that he cast [one] of his chessmen at the messenger, so that it pierced to the centre of his brain.”—Leabhar na h-Uidri.

Again, in a romantic tale in the same MS., the feap fióilli is thus referred to:

“Ciap bo móp ocup ciap bo aipeḡoa tpa Zoeḡaipe tallartaip i n-oen ḡlaic mo fip oob faimic feib tallad mac bliadna, ocup cot nomait ezip a oi boip iarpuidiu amaiol taipioioep fep fióilli fop taipioim.”

“Though great and illustrious was Loeghaire, he fitted on the palm of one hand of the man who had arrived as would a one-year-old boy, and he rubbed him between his two palms, as the feap fióille is drawn in a tairidin.” See also Battle of Magh Rath pp. 36, 37.

On the Irish Text and Translation.

ON a careful comparison of the two vellum copies of which we have spoken in the opening of this Introduction, it was found that the copy in the Book of Leacan, though not free from defects and errors, is by far the more correct one, and it has, therefore, been unhesitatingly adopted as the text of the present edition.

Sentences, words, &c., omitted from the copy in the Book of Leacan, and found in the other copy, have been supplied [in brackets] to the Irish text; and the more remarkable varie lectiones have been added for the inspection and consideration of the critical scholar at the end of this volume. It has not been considered necessary to notice the omissions of the Book of Baile an Mhuta in all cases.

The exact orthography of the Book of Leacan has been preserved throughout, but the contractions have been dispensed with; and the grammatical marks, such as hyphens, apostrophes, and stops, and also the marks of long quantity, eclipsis, and aspiration, have been supplied according to the genius of the language and the most approved modern pronunciation, except in the first piece (which is not part of Leabhar na g-Ceart, though usually prefixed to it), which has been printed without these latter marks, as a specimen of the text, showing to what a small extent the dot, as a mark of aspiration, was used of old^a. The letter h postfixed to consonants (being capital letters) to denote aspiration, and the ġ- or other consonant prefixed to mark eclipsis have been enclosed (in parentheses) to point out to the reader the addition even of a letter made by the Editor, and to distinguish at once to his eye these latter from the additions [in brackets] obtained from the second copy of the text. The reason for supplying the aspirations and eclipses must be evident to all those who understand the grammatical structure of the Irish language, for in many instances the sense of the language, and particularly the syntactical concord, is uncertain without them. The Irish text, stripped of its aspirations and eclipses, might be said to resemble the Hebrew text of the Old Testament given without the Masoretic points which determine the sounds; but the use of the Irish marks is still more important. It is true that if the language became a dead one it could be understood without the aspirations used at the middle and end of words, as, $\text{r}\alpha\text{p}\alpha\text{r}\alpha\text{d}$, $\text{d}\epsilon\text{n}\alpha\text{m}$, $\text{m}\text{n}\alpha\text{b}$, which might be as intelligible to the eye as $\text{r}\acute{\alpha}\text{p}\acute{\alpha}\text{r}\acute{\alpha}\text{d}$, $\text{d}\acute{\epsilon}\text{n}\alpha\text{m}$, $\text{m}\text{n}\acute{\alpha}\text{b}$; but the aspirations and eclipses which, at the beginning of words, point out the gender and number of words, and determine the force of particles, can never be dispensed with without obscuring the sense. For example, the letter α , as a possessive pronoun, denotes sometimes his, sometimes her, and at another time their: as, if it be required to say her head, the c will have its radical sound, α $\text{c}\epsilon\alpha\text{nn}$; if his head, the c will be aspirated, α $\acute{\text{c}}\epsilon\alpha\text{nn}$; and if their head, the c will be eclipsed, α $\text{g}\text{-c}\epsilon\alpha\text{nn}$; from which it is quite evident that, if the aspiration and eclipsis were omitted, the meaning of the word α could not be seen. It has been asserted that the ancient pronunciation differed from the modern in retaining the sounds of many consonants which are now aspirated; but there is no proof of this, as the same letter in the same grammatical situation is found sometimes aspirated and sometimes not, in the most ancient Irish MSS. extant; and it is quite fair to conclude from this fact, that these marks of aspiration were omitted as one might neglect to dot an i, or to cross a t, and the omission took place through the mere haste of transcribers, though sometimes perhaps intentionally, especially on those consonants which were always pronounced as aspirate, as b in the termination of the dative or ablative plural, and γ and δ in the termination $\alpha\gamma\sigma\sigma$, and σ in $\alpha\sigma$, the termination of active participles, or progressive active nouns. The eclipsing consonants are also equally necessary to the sense, for when they are omitted, the sense is sometimes so obscured that the meaning can only be guessed at, or discovered by investigation too troublesome to impose at all times on a reader.

^a Of the provinces.—cuicead. This word literally means a fifth part, and is translated Quintana by O'Flaherty in his Ogygia, p. 24, but it came to denote a province in Ireland, from the fact that that kingdom was anciently divided into five great divisions. See Keating's History of Ireland, Haliday's edition, p. 123-145.

Now only four provinces are recognised, and still cúig cúigead na h-Éireann is a common expression to denote all Ireland.

THE RESTRICTIONS AND PREROGATIVES OF THE KINGS OF EIRE.

THE restrictions and prohibitions of the king of Eire (Ireland), and of the kings of the provinces^a down here.

Seven are the “urgharta” (prohibitions) of the king of Eire, i. e.:

The sun to rise upon him on his bed in Magh Teamhrach^b; to alight on Wednesday in Magh Breagh; to traverse Magh Cuillinn after sunset; to incite his horse at Fan-chomair; to go on Tuesday against north Teabhtha (Teffia); to go in a ship upon the water the Monday after Bealltaine (May-day); [to leave] the track of his army upon Ath Maighne the Tuesday after Samhain (All-Hallows).

His seven “buadha” (prerogatives):

The fish of the Boinn (Boyne) to eat; the deer of Luibneach; the fruit of Manann (Mann); the heath-fruit of Brigh Leithe; the cresses of the Brosnach; the water of the well of Tlachtgha; the venison of Nas (Naas). On the calends of August all these things reached the king of Teamhair (Tara). The year in which he used to eat of these was not reckoned as life spent, and he was wont to rout his enemies before him on every side.

The five prohibitions of the king of Laighin (Leinster) here, viz.:

To go round Tuath Laighean left-hand-wise^c on Wednesday; to sleep

he writes: “This sanctified tour, or round, by the south, is called Deiseal, as the unhallowed contrary one by the north, Tuapholl (sinistrorsum).” See also Martin’s Description of the Western Islands of Scot-

 Whitsuntide, of Quinquagesima. It is between the Dothair (Dodder) and the Duibhlinn, with his head inclining to one side; to encamp for nine days on the plains of Cualann; to travel the road of Duibhlinn on Monday; to ride on a dirty, black-heeled horse across Magh Maistean.

These are his "adha" (prerogatives), viz.:

The fruit of Almhain; the deer of Gleann Searraigh; to drink with wax candles at Dinn Ríogh over the Bearbha (Barrow); the ale of Cualann; the games of Carman.

The five prohibitions of the king of Mumha (Munster):

To remain to enjoy the feast of Loch Lein from one Monday to another; to feast by night in the beginning of harvest, before Geim^d, at Leitreacha; to encamp for nine days upon the Siuir; to hold a border meeting at Gabhran; to listen to the groans of the women of Magh Feimhin when suffering violation.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

The cattle of Cruachan at the singing of the cuckoo; to burn north Laighin (Leinster); to keep the obligation of Lent^e at Caiseal (Cashel); to pass over Sliabh Cua with [a band of] fifty after pacifying the south of Éire; to go with a greyish host on Tuesday over Magh Ailbhe.

The five prohibitions of the king of the province of Oilneagmacht^f (Connaught) here:

To make a treaty respecting Cruachan after making peace on Samhain's day; to go in a speckled garment on a grey speckled steed to the heath of Luchaid in Dal Chais; to go to an assembly of women at Seaghais; to sit in Autumn on the sepulchral mounds of the wife of Maine; to contend in running with the rider of a grey one-eyed horse at Ath Gallta, between two posts.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

To take hostages first from Oirbsean; the chase of Sliabh Lughá; to drink hot ale in Magh Muirisce; the clothing of the oak of Breice with his cloak after a rout through the Tri Rosa; a border meeting at Ath Luain (Athlone) with the tribes of Tcamhair; to be on Macn-mhagh on May morning, but so as that he goes not over upon Dar-mhagh.

§ To pay for his seat at Uisneach.—This name is retained to the present day, which is that of a hill, now usually anglicized Usny hill, or Usnagh hill, parish of Killare, barony of Rathconrath, Westmeath. According to Keating, Tuathal Teachtmhar, monarch of Ireland, in the first century, enlarged the boundaries of the ancient Meath (Meath), by cutting off a portion of each of the provinces, and erecting a royal palace on each. According to him, King Tuathal erected a palace, and established fairs or public marts at Uisueach, in the Connacht portion of Meath, which were celebrated annually on the first of May. See Keating's account of Uisneach, where it is added (in the words of the translation by Gratianus Lucius) "Census autem, qui Regi Conacíe (ut cujus imperio quondam Usnacha subjecta fuit) ex his nundinis provenerat, fuit, ut singuli dynastæ qui ad nundinas accessissent, ad eum equum cum paludamentis [eacć ḡ earrpaḡ] conferret." See also O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 56, and the Ordnance map of the parish of Killare, on which the ancient remains of the hill of Uisneach are shewn. For ma, qu. recte 'ma laim.

The five prohibitions of the king of Uladh (Ulster), i. e.:

The horse-fair of Rath Line, among the youths of Dal Araidhe; to listen to the fluttering of the flocks of birds of Linn Saileach after sunset; to celebrate the feast of the flesh of the bull of Daire-mic-Daire; to go into Magh Cobha in the month of March; to drink of the water of Bo Neimhidh between two darknesses.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

The games of Cualgne with the assembly of the fleet; the mustering of his army on the plain of Muirtheimhne; to commence his hosting always from Eamhain Macha; to send his hostages to Dun Sobhairce; "The terror of Eamhain Macha," i. e. to feast there for three nights armed before passing over the border. To pay for his seat at Uisneach^g every seventh year on taking his place, and this is also the right of every provincial king in Eire. After this these required of the king of Teamhair to make the feast of Teamhair^h; the kings of the provinces used to purchase their seats at Uisneach, and the purchase and price they paid was this, i. e. the "hero's ring" of red gold which each prince wore on his hand, which he used to leave in his drinking seat; for when these kings had eaten of the feast of Teamhair, the assemblies of Eire were dissolved for seven years, so that they pronounced no decision on debts, debtors, or disputes, till the next feast, after [the expiration of] seven years. It is certain to the kings of Eire that if they avoid their "geasa" (restrictions), and obtain their "buadha" (prerogatives), they shall meet no mischance or misfortune; no epidemic or mortality shall occur in their reigns, and they shall not experience the decay of age for the space of ninety years. The poet or the learned historian who does not know the "adha" (prerogatives), and "urgharta" (prohibitions) of these kings, is not entitled to visitation or to saleⁱ [for his poetry].

^h The feast of Tara.—Féir Teamhrach. This is translated "comitia Te-moren-sia," by Colgan, Lynch, O'Flaherty, and others, but it is more truly rendered "cena Tamrech," by Tighernach, and the original compiler of the Annals of Ulster. All the modern writers of the history of Ireland assert that the Féis Teamhrach was celebrated every third year, but this does not appear to be borne out by any of the old Lives of St. Patrick, the authentic Irish annals, or the older manuscript accounts of Tara. See Petrie's History and Antiquities of Tara Hill, pp. 58, 59. See also Keating's account of the Féis Teamhrach, as established by the monarch Tuathal Teachtmhar.

ⁱ Sale, ceanbairgeaúct, literally, traffic.

It alludes to the privilege which every true poet enjoyed of selling his own compositions. For a very curious reference to this custom see the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, lib. iii. c. 21, where it is stated that Dubhthach, chief poet of Leinster, had sent his disciple Fiach to present some poems of his composition to the princes of that province.

See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 100–103.

[†] Tlachtgha.—This was the ancient name of the hill now called the Hill of Ward, which is situated near the town of Athboy, Meath. According to a vellum MS. preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 17, p. 732, the hill of Tlachtgha is situated in that part of ancient Meath which originally belonged to Munster, and in the territory of Uí Laeghaire, which, since the establishment of surnames was the patrimonial inheritance of the family of the O'Cainnealbhains, now Quinlans, the descendants of Laeghaire, the last Pagan monarch of Ireland. There is a remarkable earthen fort on the hill, said to have been originally erected by the monarch Tuathal Teachtmhar, towards the middle of the second century, where the Druids lighted their sacred fires on the eve of Samhain (All-Hallows). The well referred to in the text is at the foot of the hill, but not now remarkable for any sacred characteristics.

[‡] Luibneach.—This name is now obsolete. It was applied to a place on the borders of ancient Meath and Munster. See the Book of Leacan, fol. 260, b.

[§] Samhain.—This is still the name for All-hallow tide, or 1st of November. It is explained by O'Clery as compounded of ραη-ϕυηη, i. e. the end of Summer.

^{||} Ath Maighne.—This was the ancient name of a ford on the river Eithne (Inny), parish of Mayne, Bar. Fore, Westmeath, a short distance to the west of the town of Castlepollard. It is mentioned in the Annotations of Tirechan in the Book of Armagh, as on the boundary between north

Or traverse, after the setting of the sun,

To alight on Wednesday—I will not conceal it—
It is not lawful for him, on the hills of Breagh^z;

and south Teffia.

^x North Teabhtha.—In the fifth century this name was applied to the region extending from the river Eithne (Inny) to Sliabh Chairbre, a wild blue mountainous district on the northern boundary of the present county of Longford; in later ages this territory was usually called Anghaile (Annaly). The apparent reason that the monarch was prohibited from entering this territory was, because Cairbre, the brother of the monarch Laeghaire, and this his territory of North Teffia, were cursed [on Tuesday] by St. Patrick.

^y In the prose it is called Magh Cuilinn. This would be anglicized Moycullen. It is difficult to decide what plain this was, as there is more than one place of the name in Ireland.

^z Breagh.—This is usually called Magh

(the plain of) Breagh, and Latinized Bregia. It was the name of a plain in the eastern part of the ancient Meath, comprising, according to Keating and others, five triocha-cheds or baronies. In latter ages, as appears from the places mentioned as in this plain, it would seem that it was the country lying between Dublin and Drogheda, or between the river Liffey and the Boyne, but its exact boundaries are not defined in any of our authorities. Mageoghegan states, in his translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, at the year 778, that Moy Brey extended from Dublin to Bealach Breck, west of Kells, and from the hill of Howth to the mountain of Slieve Fuaid in Ulster. Druimí Breagh, which means dorsa Bregia, would appear to be the name of a hilly part of this territory. In Mac Firisigh's Genealogical work (Marquis of

^a The sun to rise upon him.—This ἄερ, or forbidden thing, is not unlike the solemn injunction laid by Mahomet on his successors, that they should be at prayer before the rising of the sun.

^b Comar.—There are countless places of this name in Ireland, which means the confluence of rivers. Perhaps the place here alluded to is the place called Comar near Clonard, in the south-west of the county of East Meath. Fan-chomair is the slope or declivity of the Comar.

^c Before going to heaven, i. e. while alive in this world. This expression is often used in old Irish writings, as is also ἄγυρ cian co τυαρ αρ ceal, which means, seruus in calum redeas, or mayest thou live long, an expression evidently translated by the Irish from the classical writers. See Horat. Lib. 1. Od. 11., Ovid. lib. xv. lin. 868, Tarda sūt illa dies, &c., and Cormac's Glossary, voce Ceal.

Uidhri, folio 59 (now folio 40), a. a, τυαῖβῖλ is used to denote northward, or to the left; north and left are synonymous in Irish. See above, p. 2, note c.

^f Dothair (fem.) Dothra.—This is the ancient Irish form of the name of the river Dodder, in the county of Dublin. The church of Achadh Finiche is described in the Feilire Ænguis, at 11th of May, and in the Irish calendar of the O'Clerys, as on the brink of the Dothair, in the territory of Uí Dunchadha, in Leinster—φορ βρυ Ἰοῖρα ἰ η-Ἰῖβ Dunchaδa.

^g Duibhlinn.—This was the ancient name of that part of the river Life (Liffey) on which the city of Dublin stands. It is explained nigræ thermæ by the author of the Life of St. Coemhghin (Kevin); so, Colgan, "Pars enim Liffei fluminis, in cuius ripa est ipsa civitas, Hibernis olim vocabatur Dubh-linn, i. e. nigricans alveus sive profundus alveus."—Trias Thaum., p. 112, n. 71. The city was and is called Ath Cliath, Ath Cliath Duibhlinne, and Baile Atha Cliath, a name shortened into Blea Cliath. The above prohibition may have owed its origin to the fact of some king of Leinster having been found dead in his bed in the district, with his neck crooked.

^h Cualann.—The situation and extent of this territory have been strangely mistaken by modern Irish writers. But we have evidences which will leave no doubt as to its exact situation, for in the Feilire Éniguis the churches of Tigh Conaill, Tigh mic Dimmai, and Dun mor, are placed in Cualann. And in an inquisition taken at Wicklow on the 21st of April, 1636, the limits of Fereoulen, i. e. Feara Cualann, are defined as follows:

“The said Tirlagh O'Toole humbly desired of his Majesty to have a certain territory of land called Fereoulen, which his ancestors had till they were expelled by the earls of Kildare. That the said territory containeth in length from Barneecullen, by east and south, and Glassyn[...]kie to Pollecallon by west the wind gates, viz., five miles in length and four in breadth, being the more part mountaines, woods, and rocks, and the other parte good fertile lands. Within the said territory were certain villages and craggs [recte creaghts] of old tyme, being now all desolate excepte onely Powerscourt, Killcollin, Beanaghebegge, Benagbmor, the Onenaghe, Ballycortie, Templeregan, Kiltagarrane, Cokiston, Ancrewyn, Killmollinky, Ballynbrowne, Killeger, and the Mainster.”

From this description of the territory of the Feara Cualann it is quite evident that it was then considered as coextensive with the half barony of Rathdown, in the north of the county of Wicklow, and adjoining the county of Dublin. Harris, in his edition of Ware's work, vol. ii. p. 48, places this territory several miles out of its proper locality, for he describes it as “a territory in the east and maritime part of the county of Wicklow, comprehending the north parts of the barony of Arklow, and the south of the barony of Newcastle.” But Ussher, in whose time the name was still in use, places the river of Bray and Old Court in Crich Cualann [Primordia, p. 846], in which it will be observed that he is perfectly borne out by the petition set forth in the inquisition above quoted, which was taken about the same time that he was writing his Primordia.

Hist. Ireland, Haliday's edition, preface, p. 42. This place is still well known. It is situated in the townland of Ballyknockan about a quarter of a mile to the south of Leighlin Bridge, to the west of the River Barrow. Nothing remains of the palace but a moat, measuring two hundred and thirty-seven yards in circumference at the base, sixty-nine feet in height from the level of the river Barrow, and one hundred and thirty-five feet in diameter at the top, where it presents a level surface, on which the king of Leinster's royal house evidently stood.

In a fragment of the Annals of Tighernach preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, Rawlinson, 502, fol. 1. b. col. 1. the following passage occurs relative to the burning of this palace:

“Cobétach Coelbpeḡ mac Uḡ-

“Cobhthach Caelbreagh, the son of Uḡaine Mor, was burned together with thirty kings about him at Dinu Ríogh of Magh Ailbe, in the palace of Tuaim Teambath, by Labhraidh Loingseach, i. e. Maen, the son of Aileall Aine, son of Laeghaire Lore, son of Uḡaine Mor, in revenge of his father and grandfather, whom Cobhthach Cael had slain. A war arose from this between Leinster and Leath Chuinn.”

site now occupied by the town of Wexford. It appears from the Irish work called Dinn Seachus, that the kings of Leinster celebrated fairs, games, and sports at this place from a very early period.

¹⁹ The northern Leinster, i. e. Wicklow, Kildare, south Dublin, &c., and part of the King's County. Meath, north Dublin, &c. were not considered part of Leinster at this period.

dare. The situation of this plain is thus described by Ussher: "Campus ad ripam fluvii quem Ptolemeus Birgum, nos Barrow vocamus, non procul a monte Margeo positus."—Primordia, pp. 936, 937. The author of the Irish poem called Laoi na Leacht, describing the monuments of Leinster, asks exultingly, "Where is there in any province of Ireland a plain like Magh Ailbhe?"

^v A bed at Cashel, i. e. wherever the king of Munster may have his palace, it is absolutely necessary to his prosperity and good luck, that he should sleep at Cashel for six weeks every year.

^x Geim, see p. 4, note 4.

^z Suir.—This celebrated river, which has its source in Sliabh Ailduin, (the Devil's Bit mountain,) in the county of Tipperary, unites with the Barrow and the sea about one mile below Waterford.

^a Gabhran (Gowran), in Kilkenny.—According to Keating, the territory of Ormond extended as far as this place, but this cannot be considered as its boundary for the last thousand years, for then the greater part of Ossory would belong to Munster; but this we cannot believe on the authority of Keating, as Ossory is described in the oldest Lives of St. Patrick as the western portion of Leinster, "Occidentalís Laginensium plaga." See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 865, 969. But it would appear that the kings of Munster claimed jurisdiction over Ossory as far as Gowran, while the Ossorians, on the other hand, in right of the conquest of Magh Feimhin, made by their ancestor Ængus Osraigheach, contended that their country of Osraighe should comprise all the lands extending from the river Siuir to the Bearbha, and from the mountains of Sliabh Bladhma to the meeting of the Three Waters, in Waterford harbour. But this claim was never established; for the territory does not appear to have comprised more than the present diocese of Ossory since the time of St. Patrick. See Keating, reign of Cormac Mac Airt.

^b Feimhin, more generally called Magh-Feimhin, was the ancient name of a plain comprising that portion of the present county of Tipperary which belongs to the diocese of Lismore. It is described as extending from the river Siuir northwards to Corca Eathrach, otherwise called Machaire Chaisil, from which it is evident that it comprised the whole of the barony of Iffa and Offa east. See Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 201; Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Cormac Mac Airt; and Lanigan's Eccles. History of Ireland, vol. i. p. 282.

^c Oirbsean, i. e., to take the hostages of the Uí Briuin Seola, and other tribes seated around Loch Oirbsean (Lough Corrib in the county of Galway).

^e Muirisc, i. e. Sea plain.—There is a narrow plain of this name situated between the mountain of Cruach Phadraig (Croaghpatrick) and Cuan Modh (Clew Bay), in the west of the county of Mayo. It also became the name of a small abbey situated in this plain, on the margin of the bay, from which the barony of Murrisk received its name. This name was also applied to a district in the barony of Tir Fhiachrach (Tireragh) and county of Sligo, extending from the river Easkey to Dunnacoy, and comprising the townlands of Rosslee, Cloonagleavragh, Alternan, Dunaltan, Ballykilcash, Dunheakin, Dunneill, and Ballyeskeen. It is difficult to decide which of these plains is the one referred to in the text.

^f The three Rosses.—It is difficult to decide what Rosses are here referred to, but the editor is of opinion that they are, either the district so called in the north, or that in the west of the county of Donegal.

^g Bearnas.—This is evidently the remarkable gapped mountain called Barnismore, and locally Bearnas, in the barony of Tirhugh and county of Donegal.

^h The oak of Breice.—The editor has discovered no other notice of this lucky tree.

ⁱ Ath Luain (Athlone), a ford on the Shannon, from which the town of Athlone has taken its name. The ford is on the boundary between Connaught and Meath.

Dundalk, Louth, Drumisklin, now Drumiskin, Faughard, and Monasterboice are mentioned as in this territory. See Annals of Tighernach ad ann. 1002.—Ussher's Primordia, pp. 627, 705, 827, 902. This territory was also called Machaire Oirghiall, as being the level portion of the extensive country of Oirghiall, and the ancient inhabitants were called Conaille Muirtheimhne.

¹ Eamhain Maichi, more usually written Eamhain Macha. This was the name of the ancient palace of the kings of Ulster, from the period of Ciombaeath, its founder, who flourished, according to the accurate annalist, Tighernach, about three hundred years before Christ, till A. D. 332, when it was destroyed by the three Collas, the ancestors of the people called Oirghialla (Oriels). From this period it remained without a house till the year 1387, when Niall O'Neill, presumptive king of Ulster, erected a house within it for the entertainment of the literati of Ireland. Colgan, who does not appear to have ever seen this place, describes the state of the ruins of the Ultonian palace as follows, in 1647: "Emania prope Ardmacham, nunc fossis latis vestigiis murorum eminentibus, et ruderibus, pristinum redolens splendorem."—Trias Thaum. p. 6. See also O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 36.

Dr. Lanigan, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. i. p. 314, note 135, writes: "The growth of Armagh contributed to its downfall." But this observation is quite untenable, as Emania had been deserted for a whole century before Armagh was founded. The ruins of Eamhain, or, as it is now corruptly called, the Navan fort, are to be seen about two miles to the west of Armagh, to the right of the road as you go from Armagh to Kinard or Caledon. They are well described by Dr. Stuart in his Historical Memoirs of Armagh, pp. 578, 579.

The editor examined the site of Eamhain with great care in 1835, but could not find any trace of stone walls (vestigis muro-rum eminentibus) there; the earthen works, however, are very extensive, and show that it must have been a place of considerable importance.

^u Dun Sobhairce, Sobhairce's fort (Dun-severick), an insulated rock containing some fragments of the ruins of a castle, near the centre of a small bay, three miles east of the Giant's Causeway, in the county of Antrim. See Colgan, Trias Thaum., p. 182, where its situation is described as follows: "Dunsobhairce est arx maritima et longè vetusta regionis Dal Riedie, quæ nomen illud a Sobarchie filio Ebrici, Rege Hiberniæ, primoque arcis illius conditore circa annum mundi 3668, desumpsit, ut ex Quatuor Magistris in annalibus, Catalogo Regum Hiberniæ Keteno, Lib. i., et aliis passim rerum Hibernicarum Scriptoribus colligitur." Charles O'Conor of Belanagare, and all the writers on Irish topography, down to the year 1833, had assumed that Dun Sobhairce was the old name of Carrickfergus, but the editor proved, in an article in the Dublin Penny Journal, p. 361-363, May 11th, 1833, that it is the place now called Dunseverick.

^v Uisneach.—See note g, p. 6, supra.

^w Rath Line.—This rath, which was otherwise called Rath mor Maighe Line, is still in existence in the plain of Magh Line (Moylinny), Lower Massareene, Antrim. See it referred to in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 680, and in the Annals of Connaught, at 1315.

The poet to whom they are unknown.

If ye wish for a life of many days,
Make ye all one will,
Hold charity for the sake of the good God,
Which is prerogative sufficient for every man. O man^b, &c.

never met any authority to show where in Ulster it was situated.

^b O man, Ó ĩp.—A part of the first line is usually repeated at the end of every separate poem. One reason evidently is to prevent mistake, as the vellum MSS. are so closely written that it would not be always easy to distinguish the end of one poem from the beginning of another, without some notice of this kind. It also serves as an indication that the particular piece is concluded.

vation is also given in Cormac's Glossary.
The term Caiseal, which is the name of many places in Ireland, as well as of the ancient metropolis of Munster, denotes a circular stone fort; and there can be little doubt that Corc, king of Munster, erected a fort of this description on the rock, when he changed its name from Sidh-dhrúim to Caiseal.

² Sidh-dhrúim, i. e. fairy hill.

³ Corc, the son of Lughaidh.—The date of his death is not given in the authentic Irish annals, but we may form a pretty correct idea of his period from the fact that his grandson, Aengus mac Nadfræach, was slain in the year 489.

⁴ Ele.—At this period the territory of Ele comprised, besides the country afterwards called Ely O'Carroll in the King's County, the present baronies of Eliogarty and Ikerrin, in the county of Tipperary.

THE BOOK OF RIGHTS.

I.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF CAISEAL.

The Book of Rights which treats of the tributes and stipends of Eire (Ireland) as Bencan, son of Sescnean, the psalmist of Patrick, ordained, as the Book of Gleann-Da-Loch relates.

Here follows concerning the laws of the right of Caiseal (Cashel), and of the tributes and rents given to it and by it, and of the stipends given to the kings of Mumha (Munster), and the other kings of Eire, by the king of Caiseal, when it is the seat of the monarchy.

Caiseal [is derived] from cais-il, i. e. a stone on which they used to lay down pledges, or cis-aíl^a, i. e. payment of tribute, from the tribute given to it by the men of Eire. Sidh-dhruim^b was the name of the place at first.

It happened in the time of Corc^c, the son of Lughaidh, that two swine-herds frequented that hill for the space of a quarter of a year to feed their swine on acorns, for it was a woody hill. The names of those swine-herds were Durdru, the swine-herd of the king of Ele^d, and Cularan, the swine-herd of the king of Muscraidhe^e; and there

^e Muscraidhe (Thire).—This was the ancient name of the district now comprised in the baronies of Upper and Lower Ormond, in the north of the county of Tipperary. The church Cill Cheire (Kilkeary, near the town of Nenagh), and Leatracha, (Latteragh, about eight miles south of the same town), are mentioned as in this territory. See Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp.

151, 461, and the Feilire Aenguis, Jan. 5, and Oct. 27. It is stated in a letter written by Sir Charles O'Carroll to the Lord Deputy, in 1585 (and now preserved in the Lambeth Library, Carew Collection, No. 608, fol. 15), that the name Lower Ormond was then lately imposed upon "Muskry-heery," by the usurpation of the then Earl of Ormond.

[†] There appeared to them a figure, &c.
 —This story is also given by Keating in his History of Ireland.

[‡] The angel Victor.—According to the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, lib. i. c. 19, and Jocelin, c. 19, Victor was the name of St. Patrick's guardian angel. But Dr. Lanigan asserts that "there is no foundation for what we read in some of his Lives concerning his being often favoured with the converse of an angel Victor," &c. Eccles. Hist., vol. i. p. 144.

appeared unto them a figure^f, brighter than the sun, with a voice sweeter than the angular harp, blessing the hill and the place, [and] predicting [the arrival of St.] Patrick, and it said:

Good, good, good the man who shall rule Caiseal, Walking righteously in the name of the Great Father,
 And of the Son of the Virgin,
 With the grace of the Holy Spirit;
 A comely, great, good Bishop,
 Child of life unto judgment,
 He shall fill noble angelic Eire
 With people of each order of various grades,
 To serve Christ the benign.

The figure which appeared there was Victor^g, the angel of Patrick, prophesying [the coming of] Patrick, and that the grandeur and supremacy of Eire would be perpetually in that place.

Accordingly that town is a metropolis to Patrick, and a chief city of the king of Eire. And the tribute and service of the men of Eire are always due to the king of that place, i. e. the king of Caiseal, through the blessing of Patrick^h, the son of Alplainn.

Now here are the stipends of the kings from the king of Caiseal, if he be king [monarch] of Eire, and his visitation and refection among them on that account, i. e.

One hundred drinking-horns, one hundred swords, one hundred steeds, and one hundred tunics [are given] from him to the king of Cruachan; and refection from the king of Cruachan to him for two quarters of a year, and to accompany him into Tir-Chonail.

Twenty rings, twenty chess-boards, and twenty steeds to the king of Cineal Conaill, and a month's refection from the Cineal Conaill to him, and to escort him into Tir-Eoghain.

Fifty drinking-horns, fifty swords, and fifty steeds to the king of Aileach, and a month's refection from him to him, and to escort him to Tulach Og.

Thirty drinking-horns, thirty swords, and thirty steeds to the lord are mentioned, viz., the families of O'h-Airt;

O'Riagain.

² Laighin Tuath-ghabhair.—All that part north of Bealach Gabhrain, the road of Gabhran.

³ Along with the Taidhean.—Taidhean, or tuighean, was the name of the ornamented mantle worn by the chief poet or laureate of all Ireland. It is described in Cormac's Glossary.

⁴ A hundred drinking-horns, or goblets.
—O'Brien derives the word corn from corn, a horn, Latin cornu, and asserts that drinking cups were anciently of horn.

⁵ A hundred swords.—The word claiðeam, or claiðeam, is evidently cognate with the Latin gladius. It is remarkable that Giraldu Cambrensis (Topographia Hibernie Distinct. iii. c. x. makes no mention of the sword among the military weapons used by the Irish in his time.

Tulach Og, [who gives him] refection for twelve days and escorts him to the Oirghialla.

Eight coats of mail, sixty tunics, and sixty steeds to the king of the Oirghialla, [by whom] he is entertained for a month at Eamhain and escorted to the Ulstermen.

A hundred drinking-horns, a hundred mats, a hundred swords, a hundred steeds, and a hundred ships to the king of Uladh, and the Ulstermen give him a month's refection and escort him to Teamhair (Tara).

Thirty coats of mail, thirty rings, a hundred steeds, and thirty chess-boards to the king of Teamhair; and he receives a month's refection at Teamhair, and the four tribes of Teamhairⁱ escort him to Ath Cliath (Dublin).

Ten women, ten steeds, ten ships to the king of Ath Cliath, and a month's refection [is allowed] to him from the king of Ath Cliath, who accompanies him to the Leinstermen.

Thirty ships, thirty steeds, thirty cumhals (bondmaids), and thirty cows to the king of Laighin, and two months' refection from the Leinstermen to him, i. e. a month's from northern Laighin^j and a month's from southern Laighin; [to whom he presents] thirty steeds, thirty coats of mail, and forty swords.

Such are his stipends and escorts, of which the gifted author Banean the son of Sescnean said:

THE RIGHT of each king from the king of Caiseal, Shall be question to bards for ever:
 It shall be found along with the Taidhean^k
 With the chief poet of the Gaeidhil constantly.

A hundred drinking-horns,^l a hundred swords^m from Caiseal,
 A hundred steeds, a hundred tunicsⁿ besides,

The mention of the swords in this work, as among the weapons presented by the kings to their chieftains, shows the inaccuracy of Cambrensis. Spenser considers that the Irish always had "their broad swords," and he adduces them as an evidence of his favourite theory, the descent of the Irish from the Scythians.

ⁿ Tunics, map. This word is translated "cloaks" by Mac Curtin, in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, p. 173; but in a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2, 13, it is used to translate the Latin tunica.

³ Green tumulus, d'rumélaó uaine. This alludes to the hill on which the chief of Tulach Og used to inaugurate the Irish monarchs of the northern Ui Neill race. See Addenda to the Ui Fiachrach, note L, on the Inauguration of the Irish chiefs, pp. 425, 431, &c.

^b Tulach Og, i. e. the hill of the youths (Tullaghoge, corruptly pronounced Tullyhawk), a small village in the parish of Desertcreaght, barony of Dungannon, Tyrone. After the establishment of surnames in the tenth century, the chief family of this place took the surname of O'h-Again (O'Hagan). See last reference.

^c Eamhain.—This was the ancient palace of the kings of Ulster; but after the year 332 it lay in a state of desertion, though occasionally referred to as the head residence of the Oirghialla, as in the present instance.

^d Coats of mail, lúipeacha.—The Irish word lúipeach, (which is cognate with, if not derived from the Latin lorica), certainly signifies mail armour.

^e Ulstermen.—Ulath was originally the name of the entire province of Ulster, but after the year 332 it was applied to that

Refection of a month to the young princes of Mumha, portion of the east of Ulster (Down and Antrim) bounded on the west by the Lower Bann and Lough Neagh, and by Gleann Ríge, through which an artificial boundary was formed, now called the Danes' Cast. This boundary is distinctly referred to in a manuscript in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. iii 18, p. 783, in the following words: Ἐὸν τὰ οὐδ' ἀβυρ δὸ δλιονο Ρίγε δὸ ρίγεσθ τὸ ρανν δλεαννα Ρίγε οἷν ἰυβὰρ ἀνυαρ εατορρα ἡ Clannaib Ruðραιγε ἡ n'p ἱλλεσαρ clanna Ruðραιγε ἀνυ ὀ ριν α λε, i. e. on the hither side of Gleann Ríge, the boundary of Gleann Ríge was formed from the Newry upwards between them [i. e. the Clann-Colla] and the Clanna Rudhraighe, and the Clanna Rudhraighe never returned across it from that time to the present. On an old map of Ulster the river of Newry is called Owen Glanree fluvius.

O'Flaherty and others, who have written on the history of Ireland in the Latin language, have for the sake of distinction adopted Ulidia to denote the circumscribed territory to the east, and Ultonia to denote the entire province of Ulster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part III. c. 78, p. 372; Ussher's Primordia, pp. 816, 1048; O'Connor's Dissert. p. 176, and Lan. Eccl. Hist. vol. ii. p. 28.

^f A hundred matai.—Céat matai. Mac Curtin translates this "one hundred Mantles," p. 174. Matai was probably another name for the falainḡ which in latter ages was applied to the outer covering or cloak; but this is far from certain. Matai is applied in Leabhar Breac, fol. 64, b, a, to the outer garment worn by the Redeemer. Giraldus Cambrensis describes the outer covering of the Irish in the twelfth century as follows, in his Topographia Hibernia, Dist. III. c. x.:

"Capitiis modicis assueti sunt & arctis, trans humeros deorsum, cubito tenus protensis: variisque colorum generibus panniculorumque plerumque consutis: sub quibus phalings lanceis quoque palliorum vice utuntur, seu braccis caligatis, seu calligis braccatis, & his plerumque colore fucatis."

Dr Lynch says that the falainḡ was the outside rug cloak. See Cambrensis Eversus, p. 104; but Ledwich asserts (Antiquities, second edit. p. 267) that "this it could not be, for Cambrensis describes it as worn under the hooded mantle." He also asserts that the name falainḡ is not Irish, but that it is derived from the Saxon Falding, and that it came with the manufacture into this island; but this is all gratuitous assertion.

§ Boirche.—A territory, now the barony of Mourne, the mountains of which were called Beanna Boirche. This clearly appears from a notice of Boirche in the Dinn-seanchus, and also in the Annals of Tighear-

A hundred drinking-horns, a hundred swords, a hundred matals^f

 A hundred steeds, but bay steeds,
 And ten ships^h to the hero.

Twice one month's refection from the Ulstermen
 To the noble king of Caiseal, from the church,
 Is due at the pleasant Tulach Chearnaighⁱ;
 The Ulstermen escort him to strong Teamhair^j.

Thirty coats of mail to the hero of Teamhair, Thirty rings—that is true,
 A hundred steeds not wearied in a fatiguing service,
 With thirty chess-boards for a banquet.

A month's refection on Teamhair's summit [Is due] to the mighty men of round Caiseal;
 And the tribes come with him on his march,
 The men of Midhe (Meath), to the brown Duibh-linn^k.

Ten women, ten ships with beds
 From the hero of Caiseal and Cliach^l, nach at the year 744, where it is stated that the sea had thrown ashore in the district of Boirche a whale with three golden teeth; and Giraldus Cambrensis, in noticing the same story, states, that this whale was found at "Carlenfordia in Ultonia." See his Topographia Hibernia, Dist. ii. c. 10. There is a moat near the source of the Upper Bann, still called móta bean-na ḡoirce.

^h Ten ships.—The word long is in common use to denote a ship. We have yet no evidence to prove the size or construction of the vessels here referred to. It is curious to remark, that the monarch bestows ships upon those princes only whose territories extended along the sea.

ⁱ Tulach Chearnaigh, i. e. Cearnach's hill, Tullycarney, in the county of Down.

^j Tara.—Teamair, the ancient palace of the monarchs of Ireland till it was cursed by St. Ruadhan of Lothra, in the reign of Diarmaid, the son of Fearghus Ceirbheoil, who died in the year 565, after which it became a ruin, but the Irish monarchs, and sometimes the kings of Meath, were called from it kings of Teamhair.—See Petrie's History and Antiquities of Tara Hill, pp. 100–104. See p. 7, note ^h, supra.

" It was not grooms that lashed them, nocho n-eachlacha po ploideao, i. e. it was not grooms but chieftains who rode them. The meaning of ploideao, which is explained σεαρταo, cutting, by O'Clerigh, must be here determined from the kind of whip, goad, or spur, with which the ancient Irish incited their horses. The writer of Cath Cluana Tarbh states, that the king of Leinster drove his horse with a rod of yew, immediately before the battle of Clontarf (A D 1014); and Giraldus Cambrensis, who wrote about the year 1185, as- serts, that the Irish did not use spurs, but incited their horses with rods crooked at the head. His words are :

" Item sellis equitando non utuntur, non ocreis, non calcaribus: virga tantum, quam manu gestant, in superiori parte camerata, tam equos excitant, quam ad cursus invitant. Freuis quidem utuntur, tant chami quam freni vice fungentibus: quibus & equi, semper herbis assueti ad pabula nequaquam impediuntur. Præterea nudi & inermes ad bella procedunt. Habent enim arma pro onere. Inermes vero dimicare pro audacia reputant." Top. Hib. Dist. iii. c. 10.

^v Muscraíthe.—According to all the Irish genealogical works, these were the descendants of Cairbre Musc, the son of Conaire Mor, monarch of Ireland in the beginning of the third century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 63. According to O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem there were six Muscraíthes, all in Munster, namely, 1, Muscraíthe Mitine, the country of O'Floinn; 2, Muscraíthe Luachra, the country of O'h-Aodha, along the Abhainn Mhor (Blackwater); 3, Muscraíthe Trí Maighe, the country of O'Donnagain; 4, Muscraíthe Treitheirne, the country of O'Cuirc; 5, Muscraíthe Iarthair Feimhin, the country of O'Carthaigh; 6, Muscraíthe Thire, the country of O'Donghaile and O'Fuirc. O'Brien, in his Irish Dictionary, after enumerating the several Muscraíthes, has the following remark: "It is referred to the judicious reader if it be a likely story that one Cairbre Musc, supposed son of a king of Meath in the beginning of the third century, and of whose progeny no account has ever been given, should have given the name of Muscry to every one of these territories, so widely distant from each other in the province of Munster."

THE RIGHT of Caiseal and of the king of Caiseal from [his] territories generally, down here.

With the Muscraidhe, in the first place, this tribute begins, i. e. ten hundred cows, and ten hundred hogs from the Muscraidhe.

A hundred cows, and a hundred pigs, and a hundred oxen from the men of Uaithne.

Two hundred wethers, and a hundred hogs, and a hundred cows, and a hundred green mantles from the men of Ara.

A hundred cows, and a hundred oxen, and a hundred hogs from Corca Luighe.

Ten hundred oxen and ten hundred cows from Corca Dhuibhne, also.

Ten hundred cows and ten hundred hogs from Ciarraidhe Luachra.

Ten hundred cows and ten hundred oxen from Corca Bhaiscinn.

A thousand cows, and a thousand oxen, and a thousand rams, and a thousand cloaks from Boirinn.

A hundred cows, and a hundred oxen, and a hundred sows from Seachtmhodh.

Two thousand hogs and a thousand cows from the Deise.

It is not for inferiority [of race] that they pay these tributes, but for their territories, and for the superiority of the right of Caiseal, and for its having been blessed by Patrick, as Benean sang:

THE RIGHT of Caiseal, without grief to its heroes,

It is my duty to record;

It is pleasing to the king of Gabhran the fierce

To find it [acknowledged] by his poet.

From the Muscraidhe^r without knotty falsehood,

To noble Caiseal from them [are due]

On these words it is necessary to remark, that there is as much authority from Irish history for the existence of Cairbre Musc, as there is for any other fact belonging to the same period; and that if we reject the account handed down of him and his father, who was full monarch of Ireland (not king of Meath, as O'Brien makes him, without any authority), and of O'Floinn and others, his descendants, we should with equal reason reject every other fact belonging to this period stated by those genealogists. See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 340. For the account handed down by the Irish genealogists of Cairbre Musc, giving name to those territories, O'Brien substitutes an etymological conjecture of his own, namely, that, it is likely that Muscraide is derived from mus, pleasant, and erioch, a country; but this is beneath criticism, as it is an undoubted fact that the termination (which is a patronymic one, somewhat like ιδης in Greek) is raidhe, not raighe, as we learn from tribe-names similarly formed, as Calraidhe, Caenraidhe, Ciarraidhe, Greagraidhe, Osraidhe, Tradraidhe. This being the case, we see that the root is musc, and that O'Brien's etymology is visionary. Dr. Lanigan, who, because he corrected proofs for Vallancey, was imbued with the rage for etymological delirium which was commenced by the British etymologists, and was taken up by O'Brien, and brought to its acme by Vallancey, approves of this silly etymological guess of O'Brien's, as highly probably, and writes as follows: "There were several tracts in Munster named Muscraighe, so called, says Colgan, (Tr Th. p. 186) from a prince Musc, son of King Conor [recte Conaire] the great. O'Brien, with much greater appearance of truth, derives that name from mus, pleasant, and erioch, country." The delusion will, it is hoped, stop here, and will never be supported by a third authority worth naming.

1. The extent of Muscraide Mitaíne, or, as it was called after the establishment of surnames, Muscraide Uí Fhloinn, is now preserved in the deanery of "Musgrylin," which comprises, according to the Liber Regalis Visitationis, fifteen parishes in the north-west of the county of Cork. 2. Muscraide Luachra was the ancient name of the district in which the Abhainn Mhor (Blackwater) has its source; it was so called from its contiguity to the mountains of Sliabh Luachra (in Kerry).—O'Brien says that Muiscrith Luachra was the old name of the tract of land which lies between Kilmallock, Kilfinan, and Ardpatrick, in the county of Limerick; but for this he quotes no authority, and it is against every authority, for we know from O'h-Uidhrin that the tribe of Muscraide Luachra were seated about the Abhainn Mhor (ἰν ἀβαῖνν ἡσοῖρ μαῖξριξ), but the position given them by O'Brien would leave them many miles from that river, as well as from Sliabh Luachra, from which they derived their distinguishing appellative. 3. Muscraide Tri Maighe, i. e. Muscraide of the three plains, which belonged to O'Donnagain, was not the barony of Orrery, as O'Brien asserts, for Orrery is the anglicized form of Orhraidhe, of which presently, and we have proof positive that "Muskerry-Donagan,"

A thousand cows,—it is the seat of their relative*,
A thousand hogs from their territories.

A hundred cows on the hill at time of calving,
A hundred pigs within to be stored,
A hundred oxen to the resident host are ordered
From the men of Uaithne^x freely.

Two hundred wethers from the host I will say,
A hundred hogs, the tribute they exact, which was granted by King John (see Charter 9^o. ann. Reg.) to William de Barry, is included in the present barony of Barrymore. Thus O'Brien's wild conjectures, which he put as if they were absolute demonstrated truths, vanish before the light of records and etymology. 4 and 5. The territories of Muscraíde Breoghain, or Muscraíde Uí Chuire, and Muscraíde of the west of Feimhú, are now included in the barony of Clanwilliam, in the south-west of the county of Tipperary, as appears from Keating, who places in Muscraíde Chuire Cill Beacáin (Kilpeacon) in the barony of Clanwilliam; from the Book of Lismore, fol. 47, b, b; the Tripartite Life of Saint Patrick, lib. iii. cap. 32, which places in Muscraíde Breoghain the church of Cill Fiacla (Kilfeakle), in the barony of Clanwilliam, about four miles and a half to the north-east of the town of Tipperary; and this is more particularly evident from the Ormond records, in which this territory is particularly defined. See grant of Edward III. to the Earl of Ormond. 6. Muscraíde Thire includes the present baronies of Upper and Lower Ormond, in the county of Tipperary, as we can infer from the places mentioned as in it, such as Cill Ceri (Kilkeare parish in Upper Ormond), and Leitreacha Odlraín (Latteragh, in the barony of Upper Ormond), about eight miles to the south of Nenagh. See Felire Aenguis, at 27th October and 5th January, and Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp. 151, 461. The extent of this territory is defined by Sir Charles O'Carroll, in a letter to the Lord Deputy in 1595, in which he calls it "Muscryhyry," and states that the earl lately called it by the false name of Lower Ormond, a name which it had never borne before, inasmuch as it was always considered a part of "Thomond."

* Relative.—The Muscraíde descend from Saraidh, the daughter of Conn of the Hundred Battles; and the kings of Cashel of both houses, of Eoghanacht and Dal Cais, from Sadhbh her sister, who was married to Oilíoll Olum, king of Munster.

^x Uaithne, i. e. Uaithne Cliach and Uaithne Tíre. The former now the barony of "Owneybeg," in the county of Limerick, and the latter the barony of "Owney," adjoining it, in the county of Tipperary. After the establishment of surnames the families of Mac Ceoach (Mac Keoghs), and O'Loingsigh were dominant in Uaithne Tíre, and those of O'h-Ifferain (Hefernans), and O'Cathalain (Cahallans), in Uaithne Cliach, afterwards dispossessed by the Leinster family of O'Maolriain (O'Mulrians), of the race of Cathaoir Mor.

³⁵ From the men of Ara, i. e. Ara-Tire, now the barony of “Ara,” or “Duhara,” in the north-west of the county of Tipperary, and Ara Cliach, a territory in the west of the county of Limerick. According to the Irish genealogists, the people of Ara are of the Rudrician race, and descended from Feartlachta, the son of Fearghus, king of the province of Ulster, in the first century.—See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. cap. 46. Ara-Tire is the present barony of “Ara,” in the north-west of the county of Tipperary; but the name of the territory of Ara Cliach is not preserved in that of any barony, but we know from the oldest Lives of St Patrick, and various other authorities, that it adjoined the territory of Ui Fidhginte on the east side, and that it comprised the parish of Kiltely and all the barony of Ui Cuanach, “Coonagh,” in the east of the county of Limerick, and the hill of Cnoc Aine, anglicè Knockany, in the barony of “Small County,” in the same county. It appears from a tract in Leabhar na h-Uidhri, fol. 83, that the territory of Ara was divided from that of Ui Fidhginte by the River Samhair, which appears from various reasons to be the “Morning Star.” In the course of time the people, originally called by the name Ara, were driven out or suppressed by the dominant race of Oilíoll Olam, and a tribe of the race of Eoghan, son of this Oilíoll, gave it the name of Eoghanacht Aine Cliach, of whom, after the establishment of surnames, O'Ciarmhaic (now barbarized to “Kirby”), was the chief.—See O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, and O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. cap. 67.

its extent when this poem was written. In latter ages, however, "O'Driscoll's country" of Corca Luighe was narrowed to a very inconsiderable territory, in consequence of the encroachments of "O'Mahony, O'Donovan, and O'Sullivan Beare;" and in the year 1615 it was defined as containing only the following parishes in the barony of Carbery, viz. "Myross, Glanbarahane, (Castlehaven) Tullagh, Creagh, Kilcoe, Aghadown, and Cleare Island." The tract in the Book of Leacan is well worth publishing, as throwing much light on the ancient topography of the south of Ireland.

^c Distrained, níp ic cpeacé.—It is not necessary to levy by force—or, I remember not when levied by force.

^d Cows of ravens, i. e. lean, dying cows, such as the ravens watch and perch on.

^e Dairbhre O'Duibhne.—This, which is the name of the island of "Valencia," in the west of Kerry, is here put for Corca Dhuibhne, a large territory in Kerry, belonging to the families of O'Failbhe (O'Falvys), O'Sengha (O'Sheas), and O'Conghaile (O'Connells). Shortly anterior to the English invasion, O'Falvy possessed the barony of "Corcaguiny," O'Shea that of "Iveragh," and O'Connell that of "Magunihy;" but about the middle of the eleventh century the Ui Donchadha (O'Donoghues) settled in Magunihy, and drove the O'Connells westwards into Iveragh, where they were seated at Ballycarbery, near Cahersiveen. After the English invasion, about A. D. 1192, the families of O'Suilleabhain (O'Sullivans), and Mac Carthaigh (Mac Carthys), who had been previously seated in the great plain of Munster, as will be presently shown, were driven by the English into Kerry, and then those baronies were seized upon by the Mac Carthys and O'Sullivans, who reduced the families of the race of Conaire Mor to obscurity, inasmuch that the old "Annals of Innisfallen," the chronicle of the district, does not even once mention any of them except O'Falvy, who, being chief of all this race, retained a considerable territory till finally overwhelmed by the increasing power of the Mac Carthys and O'Sullivans, as well as of the Fitzgeralds, Ferriters, Husseys, Trants, and other Anglo-Irish families, who settled at an early period in his territory of Corca Dhuibhne, and were supported against him by the Earls of Desmond, who resided principally at Tralee.

[†] Ciarraidhe, i. e. the race of Ciar, son of Fearghus, king of Ulster, by Meadhbh, queen of Connacht in the first century. The principal family of this race took the surname of O'Conchobhair (OConor). His country, which is often called Ciarraidhe Luachra, extended from the mountain of Sliabh Luachra, from the harbour of Tralee to the mouth of the Shannon, and from Sliabh Luachra to Tarbert. From this territory the county of Kerry has received its name. The Ciarraidhe were also called the race of Feorna Floinn. See note further on.

‡ Buiscinn.—This was the name of a very celebrated tribe, giving their name to a territory in the south-west of the county of Clare, of which Leim Chonchulainn (Loophead) forms the western extremity. They were the descendants of Cairbre Baccain, or Cairbre of the Smooth Palm, the brother of Cairbre Muc, already mentioned. This territory originally comprised the baronies of "Clonderlaw," "Moyarta," and "Ibrickan," in the county of Clare; but, after the expulsion of the Mac Gormans from Leinster, shortly after the English invasion, they were settled by O'Brien in the north of Corca Bhaiscinn, adjoining Corcomroe. ment of surnames, in the eleventh century, the chiefs of this territory took the surname of O'Domhnaill (O'Donnell), and O'Baiscinn; but, on the increasing of the population and power of the Dal Chais, the family of Mac Mathghamhna (Mac Mahon) became chiefs of this territory (which in latter ages comprised only the baronies of Clonderlaw and Moyarta), and reduced the race of the monarch Conaire Mor to comparative insignificance.

^h Boirinn, i. e., a rocky district, Burren, a barony in the north of the county of Clare. The chief of this territory is of the same race as "O'Conor Kerry," and, after the establishment of surnames, took that of O'Lochlainn (anglice, O'Loughlin or O'Loghlen). It is strange that Corcomruadh is omitted here, though given in the next poem.

ⁱ Seachtmhadh.—This territory is not mentioned by O'h-Uidhrin. Dr. O'Brien, in his Dissertations on the Laws of the ancient Irish, Vall. Collect. vol. i. p. 383, thinks that it was the barony of Iveragh, in the county of Kerry; but this could not be so, as that barony is mentioned under the name of Dairbhre. It was in the county of Tipperary, adjoining Ara.

 from the River Suir to the sea, and from Lismore to Credanhead, the eastern extremity of the present county of Waterford. In the fifth century, Aenghus, king of Munster, granted them the plain of Magh Feimhin, lying between Cashel and Clonmel, in the present county of Tipperary. See Keating, in the reign of Cor-mac mac Airt, and O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 69. After the establishment of surnames the chief families of this race took the surnames of O'Brúic (Brick), and O'Faelain (Phelan). They were dispossessed by the Powers and Butlers shortly after the English invasion.

¹ Cianachta.—This tribe were descended from Cian, son of Oilíoll Olum. They gave name to the present barony of Keenaght, in the county of Derry. After the establishment of surnames, the head of this family took the surname of O'Conchobhair (O'Conor) of Gleann Gemhín, which was the name of that part of the vale of the River Roa (Roe), near the village of Dun Gemhín (Dungiven). This family was dispossessed by the family of O'Cathain (O'Kanes), before the English invasion, and they are now all reduced to farmers or cottiers.

^m Comharba.—This word is here used to denote heir or successor to property,

A tribute this for their territory, originally,
 Noble is he who ordained it,
 Not [on account] of ignobility in the vigorous hosts of the Deise,
 But of the nobleness of the plain of Caiseal.

That is the tribute of Mumha, perpetual,
 Until the end of time shall come,
 Patrick, of this city over cities,
 In the time of Corc adjusted it. THE RIGHT.

THESE ARE further the inculcations of Benean, son of Sescnean, the psalmist of Patrick. He was of the Cianachta¹ of Gleann Gemhin, of the race of Tadhg, son of Cian of great Mumha (Munster), i. e. that the comharba^m of Caiseal is a general head of all, inasmuch as he is the comharba of Patrick; and when the king of Caiseal is not king of Eire, the government of the half of Eire is due to him, i. e. from Tigh Duinnⁿ, in the west of Eire, to Ath Cliath (Dublin) of Leinster. The hereditary receivers of stipends and the attendants of the king of Caiseal are the race of Breasal Breac^o, i. e. the Osraidhe. The Leinstermen are bound to come to attend the king of Caiseal any day in battle, against Conn^p or aliens.

The Gaill (foreigners) of Ath Cliath (Dublin)^q, and the exiles in Eire which is the true meaning of it when it is not applied to the representatives of saints or founders of churches.

ⁿ Tigh Duinn, i. e. the house of Donn. This name is applied to three islands at the mouth of the bay of Ceann Mara (Kennebec), now called the Cow, Bull, and Calf. Donn, the son of Mileadh (Milesius), is said to have been lost here when the Milesian colony from Spain attempted to land on the coast of Kerry, and hence, his spirit having been believed to haunt the place where he was lost, the place received the name of Tigh Duinn. See Keating's History of Ireland (Haliday's edition), p. 292, and O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 16.

^o Breasal Breac.—From Connla, the son of this Breasal Breac, are descended the Osraidhe (i. e. the men of Ossory). See p. 17, note ^a, supra.

^p Against Conn, i. e. against the descendant of Conn of the Hundred Battles, who were the dominant race in the northern half of Ireland.

The first people to whom the Irish applied the term were a colony of Galli from the coast of France, who settled in Ireland, tempore Labhra Loingseach, A. M. 3682. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 139, p. 262: and Keating, in the reign of Labhraidh. It afterwards came to signify any invaders, but it was usually applied, before 1172, to the

⁴ Clann Neill, i. e. the descendants of Niall of the Nine Hostages. After the establishment of surnames, the principal families of the southern Ui Neill (Nepotes Nelli, as they are called by Adamnan, Vita Columbae, lib. i. c. 49), were the following, viz. O'Maoilbheachluin (O'Melaghlilin), Mac Catharnaigh, in later ages called Siomnach (i. e. Fox), Mac Eochagain (Mageoghegan), O'Maolmhuaidh (O'Molloy), O'Coindhealbhaín (O'Quinlan), O'Ceallaigh (O'Kelly) of Breagh or Bregia, and several others, who sunk into insignificance soon after the English invasion.

⁵ The fasting of Ruadhán of Lothair, i. e. (by his name in Latin) St. Rodanus, the patron saint of Lortha (Lorha), now a small village in the barony of Lower Ormond, Tipperary, and six miles to the north of Burrisokane (recté Burgheis Ua are bound to attend with him into battle, for maintaining them in their territory; and he is entitled to a border tribute^e from the men of Conuacht. The cause that he obtained this was, that many saints had fasted at Teamhair, which was the royal hill of the Leinstermen till the battle of Druim Deargaidh^s, when it passed away from them, and their part of the plain of Midhe has been the lawful property of the Clann Neill^t ever since.

The cause of the extinction of the regality of Teamhair was the fasting of Patrick and his people against Laeghaire, the son of Niall, and the fasting of Ruadhan of Lothair^u, the son of Aengus, with the saints of Eire, against Diarmaid, son of Cearbhall, and against the Four Tribes of Teamhair^v; and these saints promised [i. e. predicted] that there should not be a house at Teamhair of the race of Laeghaire, or of the seed of Niall, [but] that there should be of the race of Oilioll Olum^w.

There are three kings in Leath Mhogha, who do not render tribute to the king of Caiseal, i. e. the king of Osraidhe, the king of Raithleann, and the king of Loch Lein; concerning which Bencan, the son of Sescnean, the palmist, said :

BENEAN—a blessing on the man,
 [Is he] who put this in the psalter of Caiseal,
 The history of every king and his income,
 The best that walk the land of Mumha.

The king of Caiseal, as head over all,
 Is what is here [ordained] until the [day of] judgment,

Cathain). For the whole story relating to the cursing of Tara, in 563, by this saint, see Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, page 101.

^v The Four Tribes of Tara.—After the establishment of surnames these were the families of O'h-Airt (O'Harts), O'Kiagain (O'Regans), O'Ceallaigh (O'Kellys) of Breagh, and O'Conghalaigh (O'Connollys). See Battle of Magh Rath, pp. 9, 10, and supra, p. 32, note ¹.

^w Of the race of Oilioll Olum.—There is no authority for this promise or prediction of the saints in any of the Lives of Saint Patrick, or even in that of Rodanus, who was himself of the race of Oilioll Olum. According to the genealogies of the saints, collected by the O'Clérighs, St. Ruadhan Lothra was the son of Fearghus Birn (not Aengus, as above in the text), who was son of Eochaidh, son of Deardubh, son of Daire Cearba, the ancestor of the family of O'Donnabhain (O'Donovans), and the fourth in descent from Oilioll Olum.

⁵⁷ The place of great Eibhear (Heber), i. e. the southern half of Ireland. See Keating, reign of Eireamhon (Heremon). O'Flaherty (Ogygia, part iii. cap. 17), quotes Psaltair na-Rann, as a work written by Aenghus Ceile De, in the eighth century, stating that Ireland was divided between the two principal sons of Mileadh, "Heremon" and "Heber;" that "Heber" governed the south of Ireland, and that "Heremon" enjoyed the north, with the monarchy.

The consequence of the blessing of the Lord God,

The Leinstermen are bound to go with them [the Munstermen]
Against the Gaill (foreigners) in every battle, Should they [the foreigners] come to them, truly,
The king of Caiseal is bound to drive them out from them.

He himself, the king of fair Caiseal, is entitled To three hundred suits of raiment at Samhain [from Leinster],
To fifty steeds of dark-grey color
In preparation for every great battle.

vol. i. p. 380), says "it may be concluded, from the quality of some of the subsidiary presents made by the king of Munster to his chieftains, that a foreign trade and commerce was carried on in Ireland in those days."

^a Entitled to the tribute of Connacht, i. e. when Leath Cluinn, or the northern half of Ireland, is at peace with the king of Caiseal, the latter is entitled to receive tribute from the chiefs of Connacht.

^b Umhall, a territory in the county of Mayo, comprising the baronies of "Burishoole" and "Murreak." These two territories are usually called "The Owles," by English writers, from their pronunciation of Umhall, viz., Oo-al. After the establishment of surnames, the chief family of Umhall took the surname of O'Maille, not from the territory, as is supposed by some modern writers, but from an ancestor Maille. See further as to Umhal and the clann Mhaille, in the Uí Fhiachrach, p. 43, note ¹, and p. 181, notes ¹, ².

^c The blessing of Patrick.—The writer says, that after the cursing of Teamhair, the blessing of St. Patrick was transferred to Caiseal, which had never been cursed. He next insinuates that the race of Conn would not be worthy to re-erect Teamhair, and consequently that the race of Olioll Olum, who would one day restore the royal seat, would become the dominant family of Ireland; but this has not been granted, as the southern annalists do not even pretend to have had any monarch

Every other king is bound to pay in like manner
For maintaining them in their territory.

When at peace with him is the Half Of the great island of the sons of Milcadh,
He is entitled to the tribute of Connacht^a, without concealment,
For maintaining them in their great Half [i. e. in Leath Chuinn].

What they owe is,—[it is] no falsehood,
Fifty oxen and fifty cows,
Fifty steeds, costly their bridles,
A hundred cloaks of the cloaks of Umhall^b.

Since the saints fasted
Against the renowned, noble Teamhair,
To the king of round Caiseal has come
The blessing of Patrick^c, son of Alprann.

There shall not be a house at Teamhair of Fal,— Though great the reproach^d to Inis Fail^e,—
With the Leinstermen, or the race of Conn, Until erected by the race of Olum^f.

Though good the history on which I am [engaged],
It is not taught by the Leinstermen;

of the race of Olioll Olum after the period of the cursing, except Feidhlim Mac Criomhthainn and the renowned Brian Borumha.

^aAt Teamhair of Fal, 1 σ-Θεαμπαῖο φῆνῆ; so called from its having the Lia Fail, which was preserved there. This has been translated "Stone of Fate," or "Destiny," on what authority deserves inquiry. The same word here rhymes or corresponds with itself in the same sense in this and the succeeding line. See p. 39, n. j.

^c*Inis Fail*.—This was one of the ancient names of Ireland, and it is said to have been derived from the Lia Fail. See Keating (Haliday's edition), p. 116; also Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 135.

^f*Till they are erected by the race of Olum*, i. e., by the race of Olioll Olum, who were at that period the dominant family of Munster. This prophecy has not been fulfilled, but it is very likely that it was generally believed, in the time of Feidhlim Mac Criomhthainn, king of Caiseal, that the southern race would remove St. Ruadhan's curse, and re-erect Teamhair, and the same opinion may have prevailed during the reign of Brian Borumha.

It is not preserved by Leath Chuinn, i. e. by the inhabitants of the northern half of Ireland. From these lines it is quite evident that the kings of the northern or southern Uí Néill, or those of Leinster, did not acknowledge the claim of the race of Olioll Olum to the sovereignty of Ireland. Indeed, it appears that the controversy which took place between the bards of Ireland respecting the claims of the northern and southern Irish kings to supremacy and renown, about the beginning of the seventeenth century (when they were both prostrate), was but a continuation of disputes which had existed among them from the earliest ages. To sustain their arguments the Munster writers circulated various stories about the bravery of their kings, such as Toraidheacht Cheallachain Chaisil, and other exaggerated tracts; but these, though used to support the bardic disputes, as if they were genuine history, must now be submitted to a sterner historic test than appears to have been applied to them at that time. It would appear from Irish history that the northerns were generally more powerful (excepting only during the time of Brian Borumha), for they defeated the southerns in most of the great battles that had taken place between them, from the battle of Magh Leana (fought A. D. 1192), in which Conn of the Hundred Battles defeated Eoghan Mor, the father of Olioll Olum, to the battle of Bealach Mughna (in 908), where Flann Sionna defeated Cormac Mac Cuilleainin.

It is not preserved by Leath Chuinn^g,
The history of Oilíoll Olum.

I shall preserve at sacred Caiseal
All that is claimed in the controversy
For the province in which this [palace] is exclusively,
And it shall be collected into one house.

That is the house of great Mumha (Munster),
Those two provinces are the host;
It is in smooth Mumha, highly prized,
That the supreme-sovereignty of Eire ought to be.

There are corn and fruit^h and goodness
In smooth Mumha of much prosperity;
Mead and drinking-horns and ale and music
To the men of Mumha are known.

There are three kings in great Mumha, Whose tribute to Caiseal is not due,
The king of Gabhranⁱ, whose hostages are not to be seized on,
The king of Raithleann^k, the king of Loch Lein^l.

In the year 1185 the comparative warlike characteristics of those rival races of Leath Mhogha and Leath Chuinn were described as follows, in the partizan language of Giraldus Cambrensis, who held both in abhorrence: "Sicut ergo Borealis Hibernie bellicæ: sic semper Australis gens subdola. Illa laudis, hæc fraudis cupida. Illa Martis, hæc artis ope confisa. Illa viribus nititur, hæc versutiis. Illa præliis, hæc proditionibus."—Hib. Exp. lib. ii. c. 18.

^h There are corn and fruit, &c., i.e. Caiseal, which was blessed by St. Patrick, and which is the palace of a righteous king entitled to the monarchy of Ireland, is the source and fountain of all prosperity, luck, and affluence to the men of Munster.

His territory was erected into the barony of "Kinelmeark." In later ages a sept of the same tribe settled in Corca Luighe, O'Driscoll's country, where they became masters of the district called Fonn Iartharach, or the western land, which comprised the parishes of "Kilmoe," "Scool," "Kilcrobane," "Durriss," "Kilmaconoge," and "Cahe-ragh," in the south-west of the county of Cork.

^o The tribute of Caiseal.—The tributes here mentioned are different from those mentioned in the first poem. The first were, probably, for the support of the king's household in time of peace; and these for the support of his household, and also of his troops, in time of war.

A hundred sheep and a hundred sows and ten hundred oxen and ten hundred cloaks from Corcamruadh.

A thousand oxen and a thousand sheep and a thousand cloaks and a thousand milch-cows from the Deise.

A hundred cows from the Orbhraidhe, and a hundred white cloaks, and a hundred sows.

The Eoghanachts pay no tribute, for theirs are the lands which serve Caiseal. The Clanna Chais, or [the people] of Raithleann, or of Gleann Amhain, or of Locha Lein, or of the Ui Fhigihinte, or of Aine Cliach, pay no tribute; concerning which the highly-gifted son, Banean, composed this poem:

THE TRIBUTE OF CAISEAL^o have ye heard

For its heroes from all?

Its troops constantly receive them

Every year for ever.

Three hundred beeves from the Muscraidhe^p

On the field,—'tis no falsehood,

Three hundred hogs, not fit for journeying,

A hundred cloaks and a hundred cows.

Three hundred hogs from the men of Uaithne^q

To Caiscal without failure;

Three hundred mantles, all variegated,

With a hundred strong milch-cows.

Thirty hogs which are not able to rise,

Thirty beeves which are large,

Thirty cloaks from the fierce men of Ara^r,

A hundred young cows for [the sake of] drinking [their milk].

Sixty oxen for a good week's [feast],

Sixty smooth black wethers,

Sixty fine cows from the fine Seachtmhadh^s

For Caiseal of the companies.

^t Orbhraidhe, Orbraidhe in the text, but always now Orbraidhe, and anglicé Orrery, a barony in the north-west of the county of Cork. The tribe who gave their name to this territory were descended from Fereidheach, the son of Fearghus, king of Uladh (Ulster), in the first century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 46. This territory is not mentioned in the first poem.

^u Dairfhine.—This was one of the tribenames of the family of O'h-Eidirscoil (O'Driscolls), and their correlatives, who possessed a territory co-extensive with the diocese of "Ross," in the south-west of the county of Cork. In the first poem they are called Corea Luighe. See p. 46, note ³, supra.

^z Corcumruadh, i. e. the descendants of Modh Ruadh, the third son of Fearghus, dethroned king of Ulster, by Meadhbh (Mauda), queen of Connacht in the first century. The country of Corcumruadh, as can be proved from various authorities, was co-extensive with the diocese of "Kilfenora," and comprised the present baronies of "Corcomroe" and "Burren," in the county of Clare. After the establishment of surnames, the two chieftains and rival families of this race took the surnames of O'Conchobhair (O'Conor), and O'Lochlainn (O'Loughlin), and in course of time divided

The territory of Corcumruadh is omitted in the first poem, but it is probable that Boirinn is substituted for it, in the same way as Dairbhre is put for Corca Dhuibhne.

of Oilioll Olum, and ancestor of the family of Mac Carthaigh (Mac Carthys) and their correlatives, in south Munster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, p. iii. c. 67. Dr. O'Brien (Vall. Collect. p. 384), says that "all the tribes descended from Oilioll Olum by his three sons, Eoghan Mor, Cormac Cas, and Cian, were considered as free states, exempted from the payment of annual tribute for the support of the king's household."

 Nor of the noble Aine^h.

^f Gabhair, i. e. of Gabhran. See p. 40, note ^t, suprà.

^g The Ui Fidhgheinte.—The people who bore this appellation possessed that portion of the county of Limerick lying to the west of the River Maigh (Maigue), besides the barony of “Coshma” in the same county. In the time of Mathghamhain (Mahon), king of Munster, and his brother Brian Borumha, Donnobhan (Donovan), the progenitor of the family of O'Donovan, was called king of this territory, but his race were driven from these plains by the Fitzgeralds, Burkes, and O'Briens, a few years anterior to 1201, when Amhlaoihb O Donnobhain (Auliffe O'Donovan) was seated in Cairbre in the county of Cork, having a few years before effected a settlement there among the tribe of O' h-Eidir-sceoil (O'Driscolls) by force of arms. These people were exempt from tribute as being the seniors of the “Eugenian” line, being descended from Daire Cearba, the grandfather of the great monarch Criomhthann Mór Mac Fidhaigh. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, pp. 380, 381, and Cath Mhuighe Rath, pp. 338–340, note ^z.

The goodly income of great Caiseal
 Remember thou every month;
 No one is a son on the lap of Mumha
 Until he exacts tribute. THE TRIBUTE.

I am Benean the sweet-worded, Gifted son as I was,
 I have discovered, oh wonderful tribe,
 For Caiseal its tribute. . . . THE TRIBUTE OF CAISEAL.

THE STIPENDS of the king of Caiseal to the kings of his territories:

A seat by his side in the first place, and ten steeds and ten dresses and two rings and two chess-boards to the king of Dal Chais; and to go with him in the van to an external country, and follow in the rear of all on his return.

Ten steeds and ten drinking-horns and ten swords and ten shields and ten scings and two rings and two chess-boards to the king of Gabhran.

Ten steeds and ten bondmen and ten women and ten drinking-horns to the king of the Eoghanachts when he is not king of Caiseal.

Eight bondmen and eight women and eight swords and eight horses and eight shields and ten ships to the king of the Deise.

Five steeds and five matal and five drinking-horns and five swords to the king of Ui Liathain.

Ten steeds and ten drinking-horns and ten shields and ten swords and ten coats of mail to the king of Raithlinn.

Seven steeds and seven tunics and seven hounds and seven coats of mail to the king of the Muscraidhe.

Seven swords and seven drinking-horns and seven coats of mail and seven ships and seven steeds to the king of Dairfhine.

Seven hounds and seven steeds and seven drinking-horns to the king of Dairfhine of the mountain.

Seven steeds and seven drinking-horns and seven swords and seven shields and seven hounds to the king of Loch Lein.

Seven women and seven matal [trimmed] with gold, and seven drinking-horns and seven steeds to the king of the Ciarraidhe Luachra.

Seven steeds and seven shields and seven swords and seven ships and seven coats of mail to the king of Leim na Con.

k King of Gabhran.—See p. 40, note †.

l Ten scings.—Sging, “part of the trappings of a horse.”—O'Reilly's Ir. Dict.

m Two rings and two chess-boards.—

Dr. O'Brien renders this “two cloaks and two suits of military array” (Collectan. p. 375); and in his Irish Dictionary he explains Fithcheal, “a full or complete armour, consisting of corslet, helmet, shield, buckler, and boots,” &c. But this meaning of the word seems drawn merely from the stores of his own imagination, as it never

Ten steeds to the king of Ui Chonaill Ghabhra, and ten shields and ten swords and ten drinking-horns; and no hostage [is asked] from him except to swear by the hand of the king of Caiseal.

Seven steeds to the king of Ui Chairbre, and seven drinking-horns and seven swords and seven serving-youths and seven bondmen.

Eight drinking-horns to the hero [king] of Cliach, and eight swords and eight steeds, two rings and two chess-boards.

Seven steeds and seven drinking-horns and seven shields and seven swords to the king of Gleann Amhnach.

Eight steeds and eight swords and eight drinking-horns, with the office [of chief officer of trust] of a sovereign and monarch, to the king of the men of Uaithne.

Eight steeds to the king of Eile, eight shields and eight swords and eight drinking-horns and eight coats of mail.

Such are the stipends of the kings, as the poet said, i. e. Banean:

YE LEARNED OF MUMHA the great,

If ye are mindful of the canon,

Arise, and proclaim in his house

The right of the king of Caiseal from his territories.

The first with himⁱ into another country

To take the rear of the king belongs to the Dal Chais of music, bore any meaning among the ancient or modern Irish, but a chess-board of a quadrangular form, marked with black and white spots. See Cormac's Glossary, in voce. O'Reilly, who copies O'Brien verbatim in too many of his explanations, has avoided this, but he gives us an additional meaning for piṛcéall, namely, a "philosopher," a meaning which he inferred from Cormac's conjectural derivation of the term, which states that the black and white spots on the board had a mystical signification.—See the passage from Cormac, cited p. 35, note ^u, suprà.

^a Ten horns, &c.—Dr. O'Brien translates this "ten golden cups," but "golden" is added by himself.

^o Unless Caiseal belong to him, i. e. when the king of Caiseal was of the Dal Chais. According to the Will of Oilíoll Olum, the kings of Caiseal were to be alternately elected from the descendants of his sons, Eoghan Mor and Cormac Cas. In the early ages the stock of Mac Carthaigh (the Mac Carthys), O'Ceallachain (the O'Callaghans), and O'Donnchadha (the O'Donoghoes), were the chiefs of Eoghanacht Chaisil; but immediately before the English invasion the tribe of Mac Carthaigh were by far the most powerful of all the Eoghanachts. Dr. O'Brien says that "the O'Donoghoes of Eoghanacht Chaisil were of a different stock from those of Loch Lein" (Collectan. vol. i. p. 375); but in this he is undoubtedly mistaken, for the family of O'Donnchadha (O'Donoghoes) of Loch Lein were the most royal family of that name in Munster, for their ancestor, Dnbh-da-bhoireann, who was slain in 957, was king of Munster, and his son Domhnall commanded the forces of south Munster (Desmond) at the battle of Cluain-tarbh, in 1014.

^p Deise.—See p. 49, note ^k, and p. 66, note ^a, suprà. It will again be observed that ships are presented to the chiefs of territories verging on the sea.

^q Across the sea, i. e. imported. See p. 55, note ^z.

^r With gold, i. e. ornamented with gold. O'Brien makes this "a sword and shield of the king's own wearing, one horse richly accoutred, and one embroidered cloak."—(Collect. vol. i. p. 378). There does not seem to be anything to warrant this translation.

^s Ui Liathain.—This tribe derived their name and origin from Eochaidh Liathnach, the son of Daire Cearba. After the establishment of surnames, O'Liathain and O'h-Anmchadha were the chief families of Ten bondmen, ten large women

 And ten horns for carousingⁿ,
 Unless Caiseal of the prisons belong to him^o,
 Ten steeds to the king of the Eoghanachts.

Eight bondmen, eight brown-haired women
 To the king of the Deise^p, and ten ships, Eight shields, eight swords for wounding,
 And eight horses [brought] across the green sea^q.

Five steeds, five matals with gold^r,
 And five horns for carousing,
 Five swords for all slaughter
 To the heroic king of Ui Liathain^s.

Ten steeds to the king of red Raithlinn^t, Ten drinking-horns from the king of hardy Caiseal, this tribe. After the English invasion their territory was granted to Robert Fitzstephen, who granted it to Philip de Barry, as appears from the confirmation charter of king John, who, in the eighth year of his reign, confirmed to William de Barry, the son and heir of this Philip, "the three cantreds of Olethan, Muscherie-Dunegan, and Killede." Now, we learn from Giraldus (Hib. Exp. lib. ii. c. 18, 19) that when Fitzstephen and Milo de Cogan came to a partition, by lot, of the seven cantreds granted them by Henry II., the three cantreds to the east of the city of Cork fell to Fitzstephen, and the four to the west fell to the lot of De Cogan. We know also from Irish history, that the present village of Castle-Lyons, or Caislean Ui Liathain, and the island called Oilean mor Arda Neimhidh, now the "Great Island," near Cork, were in Ui Liathain, which gives us a good idea of its position and even extent, and from these facts we may infer with certainty that the three cantreds confirmed by King John, namely, "Olethan, Muscherie-Dunegan, and Killede," are included in the baronies of "Barrymore," "Kinatalloon," and "Imokilly," in the county of Cork, and "Coshmore" and "Coshbride" in that of Waterford. Harris asserts, in his edition of Ware's Antiquities, p. 50, that "Hy-Liathain is a territory in the south of the county of Waterford, in the barony of Decies, on the sea coast, opposite to Youghal. But this is unworthy of Harris, who ought to have known that "Olethan," which belonged first, after the Anglo-Norman invasion, to Fitzstephen, and passed from him to Barry, was not on the east side of the river of Eochail (Youghal), but on the west, for in the charter of Henry II. to Robert Fitzstephen and Milo de Cogan, he grants them the lands "as far as the water near Lismore, which runs between Lismore and Cork."

^b Corcumruadh (Corcomroe).—See p. 65, note 2, suprà.

^c Ui Ghabhra, i.e. the Ui Chonail Ghabhra, now the baronies of Conillo, in the west of the county of Limerick. After the establishment of surnames, the chief families of this race took the names of O'Coileain (Collins), O'Flnhaclaidh (Kinealy), O'Flannabhra (Flannery), and Mac Inneirghe (Mac Eniry). Dr. O'Brien says, (Collect. vol. i. p. 377), "that Mac Ennery and O'Sheehan of this race were descended from Mahon, an elder brother of Brian Borumha." But for this he had not sufficient authority, for, according to the pedigrees of the Ui Fidhgheinte (given in the Books of Leacan, and Baile-an-nhota, and by Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh), and in O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, Mac Inncirghe is set down as chief of Corea Mhuichet, a sept of the Ui Fidhgheinte; and the parish of "Castletown Mac Eniry" in the south of the county of Limerick, where he resided, is still called Corea Mhuichet. The same inaccurate writer asserts in his Irish Dictionary, voce Conall, that "Conall Gabhra, from whom the country of Ibh Conaill Gabhra derives its name, was the ancestor of the stock of the O'Conels, widely spread throughout the counties of Limerick, Kerry, and Cork;" but this is not supported by any authority; and, besides, it contradicts what the same writer says, in his Dissertation, &c. (Collect. vol. i. p. 380), where it is asserted, that "O'Shea, O'Connel, and O'Falvy are all descended from Core, son of Cairbre Muse, son of Conaire, son of Mogh Laimhe, king of Leath Chuinn." This latter statement is nearly correct, according to the Irish genealogical books, but again, the same writer (who appears to have had a bad memory) calls this same Cairbre Muse, "one Cairbre Muse, supposed son of a king of Meath in the beginning of the third century, and of whose progeny no account has ever been given." See his Dictionary, voce Muiscrith. If the pedigrees of the O'Sheas, O'Falvys, and O'Connells are traced to him, some account has been given of his descendants.

^d King of Brugh-righ, i. e. of the Ui Chairbre Aebhdha, who had their seat at Brugh-righ (Bruree), on the river Maigh (Maigue). Dr. O'Brien says, that "the king of Cairbre Aobhdha, who was O'Donovan, had his principal seat at Brugh-righ, and that his country was that now called Kenry, in the county of Limerick." (Collect. vol. i. p. 377). This assertion, which has been received as fact by all subsequent writers, is wofully incorrect, for "Kenry" is a small barony lying along the Shannon, in the north of the county of Limerick; whereas Brugh-righ, its supposed head-residence, is many miles distant from it, in the other end of the county. The fact is, that the country of the Ui Chairbre Aebhdha, of which O'Donnobhain was the chief, comprised the barony of "Coshma," the districts around "Bruree" and "Kilmallock" and the plains along the river Maigh (Maigue) on the west side, down to the Shannon. This appears from the traditions in the county which state that O'Donnobhain resided at Brugh-righ, and Cromadh (Croom) on the river Maigh (Maigue); from the Feilire Aenghlois, at 26th March, which places Cill Da Cheallog (Kilmallock), in Ui Chairbre; and from O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, which states that O'Donnobhain of Dun Chuire (a name for Brugh-righ, as being one of the seats of Core, king of Munster) possessed, free of tribute, ἑαν ἑίορ the lands extending along the Maigh (Maigue), and the plains down to the Seannain (Shannon),—να ἑάρτ ρίορ co Sionnainn. See the Battle of Magh Ragh, p. 340.

That Caenraidhe (Kenry) was a part of Ui Chairbre Aebhdha is highly probable, but we have the authority of O'h-Uidhrin to show that O'Maelchallainn (Mulholland), was the chief of Caenraidhe, and that near him was O'Bearga, in the district of Ui Rosa, (now the parish of Iveruss, υἱ Ρορτ, on the Shannon, and in the barony of Kenry). These were sub-chiefs to O'Donnobhain as chief of all Ui Fidhgeinte, as he frequently was, and perhaps as chief of Ui Chairbre Aebhdha also.

^e Hero of Aine, i. e. the king or chief of Eoghanacht Aine Cliach. See p. 39, note ¹, suprà.

^f King of the Forthuatha, i. e. the king of Feara Muighe, i. e. the tribe of O'Dubhagain (O'Dugans), descended from the celebrated druid Mogh Ruith, and here called Forthuatha, as being strangers placed centrally between the Ui Fidhgheinte and the Eoghanachts of Gleann Amnach, who were two tribes of the royal blood of Oilíoll Olum.

^g King of Gleann Amnach, i. e. of Eoghanacht Gleanna Amnach. This was the country of a branch of the tribe of O'Caomh (O'Keefes), comprising the country about Gleann Amnach, Glanworth, barony of Fermoy, Cork. Before the English invasion, O'Caomh and O'Dubhagain possessed the regions now called "Fermoy, Condons, and Clangibbons;" but the boundary between them (O'Keefe and O'Dugan) could not now be determined; all we know is, that O'Dubhagain was between O'Caomh and the Ui Fidhgheinte, and consequently to the north of them. After the English invasion the country of Feara Muighe Feine was granted to Fleming, from whom it passed, by marriage, to the Roches, and it is now usually called Criche Roisteach, or Roche's country.

^h Uaithne.—See p. 45, note ^s, suprà.

ⁱ Eile.—This was the name of a tribe and an extensive territory, all in the ancient Mumha or Munster. They derived the name from Eile, the seventh in descent from Cian, the son of Oilíoll Olum. According to O'h-Uidhrin, this territory was divided into eight "tuatha," ruled by eight petty chiefs, over whom O'Ceirbhail (O'Carroll) was head or king. The ancient Eile (Ely) comprised the whole of Eile Ui Chearbhaill (Ely O'Carroll) which is now included in the King's county, and comprises the baronies of Clonlisk and Ballybritt; also the baronies of Ikerrin and Elyogarty, in the county of Tipperary. The boundary between "Ely O'Carroll" and the ancient Midhe (Meath) is determined by that of the diocese of Killaloe with the diocese of Meath, for that portion of the King's county which belongs to the diocese of Killaloe was "Ely O'Carroll," and originally belonged to Munster. The other portions of the original Eile, such as "Ikerrin" and "Elyogarty," were detached from O'Cearbhaill, shortly after the English invasion, and added to "Ormond;" but the native chieftains O'Meachair (O'Meagher) and O'Fogartaigh (O'Fogarty), were left in possession, but subject to the Earl of Ormond. Sir Charles O'Carroll, in his letter to the Lord Deputy in 1595, asserts, that "the Earl of Ormond had no right to any part of the country lying north of Barnane Ely" (now the Devil's Bit mountain), but this cedes him "Elyogarty," which appears to have been his indisputable property since the time of Edward III. According to O'h-Uidhrin, O'Fogartaigh, the chief of the southern Eile, i. e. Eile Fhogartaigh (Elyogarty) is not of the race of the Eleans, but descended from Eochaidh Baildearg (king of Thomond in St. Patrick's time); from which we may perceive that the southern Eile had been wrested from the original proprietors before the English invasion by a sept of the Dal Chais, but nothing has been yet discovered to determine when or how the ancestors of the family of O'Fogartaigh obtained it.

THE LAW and distribution of these stipends further here from the king of Caiseal to the kings of his districts (stranger tribes) and great territories, according to the revenues of their lands and family, according to law and inheritance; and it is according to deserts of their office and fealty, to the greatness of their strength and superiority, and to the number of their expeditions and hostings, and to their prosperity and affluence, and to seniority and counsel, foundation and excellence, that these stipends are apportioned among them, on the authority of the learned and of history, as Benean says here:

THERE IS HERE the history, pleasant the series,

Which thou knowest not unless learned;

The stipends of the just king of Caiseal

To his fair kings in the first place.

When the just Dal Chais^k have not the sovereignty

Over the race of the high, great Eoghan^l,

[Their king] sits by the shoulder (side) of the king of Caiseal

Though many be his guests.

ⁱ From the Eoir to Dunha Dreasa.—The tract of land extending from the River “Nore” (an Eoir or an Fheoir) to a mound near Cnoc Grafann (Knockgraffon), Tipperary. This comprises the greater part of the ancient Ossory, which was called Laighin Deas-ghabhair by the ancient Irish, and said to have been forfeited to Munster by the Lagenians for their murder of Fearghus Scannal; or, according to other accounts, of Eidirseal, the father of the monarch Conaire Mor. See Book of Leacan, fol. 225, b.; 229 b.

^k Brugh-righ, i. e. Arx regis (Bruce), on the west bank of the River Maigh (Maigne), in the barony of Upper Connello and county of Limerick, about four miles to the north of Kilmallock. There are extensive ruins of earthen forts here, said by tradition to have been erected by Oilíoll Olum, the ancestor of the O’Donovans. There are also the ruins of a circular wall defended with square towers. The circular wall is evidently very ancient, and is said by tradition to have been built by an O’Donobhain, before the English invasion; but the square towers are evidently several centuries more modern, and are said to have been erected by that branch of the famous family of Lacy or De Lacy, descended from William Gorm, the son of Sir Hugh De Lacy, by the daughter of Ruaidhri O'Conchobhair (Roderic O'Conor), the last monarch of all Ireland of the Milesian race. Brugh-righ is mentioned the first in order in this list, as it was the principal seat of Oilíoll Olum, the ancestor of the kings and dominant families of Munster.

^l Muilthead.—Muilthead, now applied to a river in the north-west of the county of Limerick, is a corruption of this name.

^m Seanchua, Anglicè "Shanahoe," in the county of Limerick.

ⁿ Ros Raeda.—Unknown to the Ed.

^o Cluain Uamha, i. e. the Lawn or Meadow of the Cave, Anglicè "Cloyne," the head of an ancient bishop's see, in the county of Cork.

^p Cathair Chnuis.—Unknown to the Ed.

^q Cathair-Fhionnabhrach.—This is the name of a remarkable stone fort, of the kind called "Cyclopean," near the village of Cill Fionnabhrach (Kilfenora), in the county of Clare, also the head of an ancient diocese.

^s Cathair Ghleanna Amnách, i. e. the stone fort of Gleann Amnách, which is the ancient and real name of "Glanworth," in "Roche's country," in the north of the county of Cork. See Smith's Natural and Civil History of Cork, book ii. c. 7.

^t Cathair Chinn Chon, Anglicè "Caherkincon," a (Cyclopean) stone fort near Rockbarton, the seat of Lord Guillamore, in the barony of Small County, and county of Limerick. There are extensive remains of such stone forts in this immediate neighbourhood, which indicate its having been anciently a place of importance.

^u Dun Fir Aen Cholga.—Unidentified.

^v Dun Gair.—This fort was on the hill of "Doon," over Loch Gair (Lough Gur), barony of Small County, Limerick. See Fitzgerald's Stat. Acc. Limerick. This hill and lake were fortified by Brian Borumha, in the tenth century.

^w Cathair Meathais.—This was probably the ancient name of the great (Cyclopean) fortress now called Cathair na Steige (Stague Fort), situated in the parish of Kilerohane, barony of Dunkerron, in the county of Kerry. See Vall. Collect. vol. vi., and Baron Foster's model in the Museum of the Dublin Society.

^x Teamhair Shubha.—This was probably another name for Teamhair Luachra, which was the name of a fort near Beal Atha na Teamhrach, in the parish of Dysart, near Castle Island, in the county of Kerry.

^y Air Bile, or, as it is written in the prose, Ard Bili, i. e. the height or hill of the tree. There is a place of this name near "Bally-mack-elligott," in the barony of Clanmaurice, and county of Kerry.

^z Aenach m-Bearrain.—Perhaps the fort N. by W. of Barrane, four miles E. of Kiltrush, in Clare.

^a Magh Caille.—Unknown to the Ed.

^b Ard Chonaill, i. e. the height or hill of Conall.—Unknown to the Editor.

Aras, are evidently in the county of Clare, but the Editor has not identified them.

^d The three Aras, i. e. the three islands of Ara (Araun) in the Bay of Galway, which originally belonged to Corcumruadh. The largest of these islands was granted by Aenghus, king of Munster, to St. Eanna, who built several churches upon it. For some account of the forts on these islands, see O'Flaherty's Iar-Connacht, by Hardiman, pp. 77, 78.

^e Aenach Cairpre, i. e. the fair of the territory of Cairbre. This is the place now called Mainister an Aenaigh, Anglicè Mannisteranenagh, i. e. the Monastery of the Fair, from a great monastery erected by the Uí Bhriain (O'Briens), a short time previous to the English invasion. It is situated in the barony of "Pubblebrian," in the county of Limerick.

^f Druim Mor, i. e. the great ridge. This is probably the Dromore near Mallow.

^g Druim Caecin, i. e. dorsum amœnum, "Drunkeen," but which of the many places so called, in Munster, has not been determined.

^h Cathair Chuir, i. e. the stone fort of Corc; probably the ancient name of Cathairgheal, a great fort near Cahersiveen.

ⁱ Mur-bolcan, i. e. the inlet "Trabolgan," east of the entrance of Cork harbour.

^k Geibhtine, now Eas Geibhtine (Askeaton), on the Dacil (Deel).

^l Grafann, now Cnoc Grafann, Anglicè Knockgraffon, a townland giving name to a parish in the barony of Middlethird and county of Tipperary. There is a very large moat here surrounded by a fosse. This was the principal seat of the Uí Suileabhain (O'Sullivans), till the year 1192, when they were driven thence by the English, who erected a castle close to the moat. For some historical references to this place the reader is referred to Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Cormac mac Airt, and the Annals of the Four Masters, A. D. 1192.

^m Aill Mic Cuirr, i. e. the cliff of Mac Cuirr. Unknown to the Editor.

ⁿ Magh Naei, &c.—These, which were names of plains on which the king of Munster had forts, are unidentified.

^o Caechan Boirne.—This was the name of a fort in Boirinn (Burren), in the county of Clare, where, though there are countless (Cyclopean) forts, there is none bearing this name at present.

^p Mur-mhagh, i. e. sea plain.—This is probably “Murvy,” in the great Island of Ara.

^q Magh Eanaigh Rosa.—Unknown to the Editor.

^r Tuaim n Eidhin.—Unknown to the Editor.

^s Asal.—This fort was at Cnoc Droma Asail, now Tory Hill, near Croom, in the county of Limerick.

^t Eibhleó.—This was a fort in Sliabh Eibhlinne, in the county of Tipperary, adjoining the barony of “Coonagh,” in the county of Limerick.

^u Ucht-na-rioghna, i. e. the breast of the queen. Unknown to the Editor.

^v Cuilleann, now Cuilleann O g-Cuanach, in the barony of Clanwilliam and county of Tipperary, but originally, as its name indicates, in the territory of Ui Chuanach, which is supposed to be included in the present barony of “Coonagh,” in the county of Limerick.

^w Cua.—This seat was at Sliabh Cua, in the county of Waterford, a short distance to the south of Clonmel. See p. 16, note 1, suprà.

^x Claire.—This was the name of a conspicuous hill situated immediately to the east of Duntryleague, in the barony of Coshlea, and county of Limerick. There are, however, two forts still called Dun g-Claire, said to have been regal residences of the kings of Munster; one now called Lios Dun g-Claire, i. e. the fort Dun g-Claire, situated on the boundary between the townlands of Glenbrohann and Glenlara, in the barony of Coshlea, and county of Limerick; and the other in the townland of Farrannacarriga, parish of Ballynacourty, barony of Corcaguiny, and county of Kerry.

^y Inneoin.—This place is now called mullac Inneoin, i. e. the summit of Inneoin, Anglicè Mullaghinnone, a townland in the parish of Newchapel, near the town of Clonmel, barony of Iffa and Offa East, county of Tipperary. Here are the ruins of a castle, which probably occupy the site of the more ancient fort. See Keating, in the reign of Cormac mac Airt.

^z Aine, now Cnoc Aine, a conspicuous hill in a parish of the name, in the barony of Small County, Limerick. There is a fort on the summit of this hill which commands an extensive prospect of the country in every direction. For some account of the places which can be seen from it, see Book of Leinster, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2, 18, fol. 105.

^a Ord.—Unknown to the Editor.

^b Uilleann Eatan.—Unknown to the Ed.

^c Loch Ceann, i. e. lake of the heads.—Unknown to the Editor.

^d Ceann Nathrach, head or hill of the adder or adders, the ancient name of Ceann Sleibhe, a beautiful mountain over the lake of Inchiquin, near Corofin, in the county of Clare. From this place Aenghus Cinn Nathrach, the fifth son of Cas, and ancestor of the family of O'Deaghaidh (O'Dea), took his cognomen.

^f Druim Caein.—This was probably the name of a subdivision of Sliabh Caein, now Sliabh Riach, on the borders of the counties of Limerick and Cork.

^g Druim Finghin.—This is the name of a long ridge of high ground extending from near Castle Lyons in the county of Cork, to the Bay of Dungarvan in the county of Waterford, and dividing the barony of Decies within Drum, from that of Decies without Drum [i. e. without or outside Druim Finghin].

^h Treada-na-riogh, i. e. Tre-dui na riogh, the triple-fossed fort of the kings. This was probably the ancient name of the great moat at Kilfinnan, near Kilmallock, in the county of Limerick, which consists of a moat placed in the centre, and three outer ramparts of circumvallation. The Editor was once of opinion that this was one of the forts called Dun g-Claire, but he has been convinced of the contrary by the existence elsewhere, and not distant, of a fort called Dun g-Claire.

^k Rath Faeladh, i. e. Fraeladh's rath, or earthen fort.—This is probably the ancient name of Rath Gaela, or "Rathkeale," in the county of Limerick.

ⁱ Rath Arda, i. e. the fort or rath of the height. This is evidently the place called Rath Arda Suid, in the Annals of the Four Masters, A. M. 305, which is that now called Rath-Suid, a townland situated in the parish of Donaghmore, near the city

II.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF CRUACHAIN.

OF THE REVENUE of Connacht down here, as Bencan has related:

The rents and stipends of Connacht, i. e. the great tribute of Connacht both refection and escort: first to Cruachain:

From Umhall the tributes of Connacht are first presented to Cruachain:

Five score cows and five score hogs and five score mantles from Umhall.

Five score oxen and five score milch-cows and three score hogs and sixty cloaks from the Greagraidhe.

Two hundred and forty cloaks and two hundred cows and a hundred and twenty hogs from the Conmaicne.

A hundred cows and a hundred oxen from the Ciarraidhe; also sixty red cloaks and sixty hogs from the Ciarraidhe.

Six times fifty milch-cows, three times fifty hogs, three times fifty cloaks from the Luighne every May-day, and three times fifty oxen; and this is not in consequence of inferiority of [race in] those tribes, but in consequence of the liability of the grass and land.

A hundred and forty cows and seven hundred caercha (sheep)—or caera iarainn (masses of iron)—three hundred and fifty hogs and three hundred and fifty oxen from the Corca.

A hundred and fifty red cloaks, a hundred and fifty hogs and a hundred and fifty oxen from the Dealbhna, and this for maintaining them in their territory.

Seventy cloaks, seventy hogs from the Ui Maine for their territory.

The Ui Briuin and the Siol Muireadhaigh and the Ui Fiachrach and the Cineal Aedha are free tribes, and they are equally noble as the king, and they do not go upon an expedition or hosting except for pay;

^a Tribute—cineaclann. This word is used by Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh in the sense of stipend or salary; but when applied to a king it means "a tribute paid to him in consideration of his protection." It sometimes means eric or fine.

^b Cruachain.—Vide supra, p. 20, note ¹; p. 34, note ^o. For the remains still to be seen at this place the reader is further referred to the Editor's translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, pp. 204–206.

^c Unhall, in the west of Mayo, comprising the baronies of "Burrishoole" and "Murrisk" (see p. 19, note ¹, supra), into which two parts, Upper and Lower, it has in latter ages been divided, the town of Cathair na Mart (Westport) standing on the boundary between them. These two divisions were in former times usually called "the Owles" (Ools) by English writers, and absurdly Latinized Pomum, as "O'Malley de Pomo," State Papers, temp. Henry VIII. vol. ii. part iii. p. 4, A. D. 1515. Since the introduction of surnames the family of O'Maille (O'Malley) have been chiefs in this district. They are descended from Conall Oirbsean, one of the twenty-four sons of Brian, the common an-

and they do not go into battle with the king but for reward; and if they be killed, and upon their being killed, the king is bound to give eric to their king; and when the kingdom [of Connacht] does not belong to the race of Fiachra or Aedh or Guaire, the best man of them is privileged to sit by the right shoulder of the king of Connacht. If they happen to be in exile in another territory, they are to sit at the right shoulder of the king of Caiseal, or of the king of Nas, or of the king of Eamlain Macha. Of which things the gifted scion Benean sang:

HEARKEN TO A HISTORY, which is not trifling,
Of the supreme-king of Connacht of the red swords;
What he is entitled to from his own country
For his protection, [and] as tribute^a.

The great tribute of Connacht [to be conveyed] to Cruachain^b Without disrespect, from goodly districts, Everything that to right is due,
Tribute, refection and escort.

Five score cows of lasting condition,
Five score hogs of broad sides,
Five score mantles, beautiful their texture,
From Umhall^c to the king of Connacht.

The high tribute of the Greagraidhe^d I shall mention:
To the king of Connacht they certainly shall pay Five score oxen of good color,
To the king of Connacht and Cruachain.

Three score hogs, great the tribute,
And three score royal cloaks, cestor of the families of O'Conchobhair, O'Flaithbheartaigh, and other chieftain families of Connacht, and are not of French origin, as some of themselves now wish to be believed. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 79.

^d Greagraidhe, now ridiculously called "the Gregories," a district in the south of the county of Sligo, supposed to be co-extensive with the barony of "Coolavin." See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 46; but it was originally much more extensive. The ancient inhabitants of this district were descended from Aenghus Fionn, the son of Fearghus, king of Ulster in the first century.

^c Conmaicne, i. e. descendants of Conmhac, son of Fearghus, ex-king of Ulster, in the first century, by Meadhbh, queen of Connacht. There were three territories of this name in Connacht, namely, Conmaicne Chineal Dubhain, now the barony of Dunmore, in the north of the county of Galway; Conmaicne Cuile Toladh, now the barony of Kilmaine, in the south of the county of Mayo; and Conmaicne Mara, now the barony of Ballynahinch, in the north-west of the county of Galway. It should be remarked that before the Dalcassian families, called Dealbhna, settled in West or Iar Connacht, the Conmaicne Mara, or maritime Conmaicne, had possession of all that part of the present county of Galway lying west of Loch Measca (Mask) and Loch Oirbsean (Corrib), and between Galway and the harbour of Cael Shaile Ruadh (Killary), all which district has its old name still revived or preserved in the corrupted form of "Connamara." See Hardiman's edition of O'Flaherty's Iar-Connacht, pp. 31, 92, &c. &c.

^f Ciarraidhe. — These were also descended from Fearghus, ex-king of Ulster, and derive their name and origin from Ciar, one of the illegitimate sons of Fearghus, by Meadhbh, queen of Connacht. The Ciarraidhe of Connacht had been seated in Munster for some centuries before they removed to Connacht. According to a MS in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 17, p. 875, they removed to Connacht in the reign of Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna the eighth Christian king of Connacht, under the conduct of Cairbre, son of Conaire. As the account of the Ciarraidhe of Connacht given in that manuscript is very curious, and determines the situation of an ancient Irish church, the position of which has much puzzled modern writers, the Editor is tempted here to present the reader with a literal translation of it.

"When first did the Ciarraidhe come into Connacht? Not difficult. In the time of Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna. Which of them came in first? Not difficult. Coirbri, son of Conaire, who came from the south of Munster, whence he had been expelled. He came with all his people to Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna. Coirbri had a famous daughter, and king Aedh asked her of her father. She came one time to her father's house, and her father conceiving great grief in her presence, she asked him whence his grief arose. 'My being without lands in exile,' said he. Messengers afterwards arrived from the king to see the daughter, but she resolved not to go to the king until he should give a good tract of land to her father. 'I will give him,' said Aedh, 'as much of the wooded lands to the west as he can pass round in one day, and St. Caelainn, the pious, shall be given as a guarantee of it.' Coirbri afterwards went round a great extent of that country, according to the mode directed, and finally returned to his house, and settled his people in these lands. The men of Connacht greatly criminated Aedh for the too great extent of land, as they deemed, which he had given away, and said that Coirbri should be killed. 'This cannot be done,' said Aedh, 'for Caelainn is guarantee for himself and for his land. But, however, let some beer be made by you for him, and give him a poisonous draught in that beer, that he may die of it.' A feast was, therefore, afterwards prepared. This whole affair was revealed by the Lord to St. Caelainn, and she came to the feast.

'Why hast thou violated my guarantee?' said she to Aedh. 'I will violate thee as regards thy kingdom.' 'Accept thy own award in compensation for it,' said the king. 'I will,' said Caelainn. 'Pass thy sentence then,' said the king. 'I will,' said she. 'Because it is through the medium of beer thou soughtest to destroy Coirbri, may the king of Connacht meet decline or certain death if ever he drink of the beer of the Ciarraidhi.' Hence it came to pass that the Ciarraidhi never brew any beer for the kings of Connacht. 'Grant land to myself,' said the nun. 'Choose it,' said the king. The Tearmonn Mor was afterwards given, where her church is at the present day."

St. Caelainn, who was of the race of Ciar, son of Fearghus, is still held in the highest veneration in the territories of Ciarraidhe Aei (in the west of the county of Roscommon), and Ciarraidhe Locha na n-Airneadh (in the barony of Costello, and county of Mayo). Her church is still sometimes called Tearmonn Caelainne, and sometimes Tearmonn Mor. It is situate in the parish of "Kilkeevin," in the territory of Ciarraidhe Aei, about one mile to the east of the town of "Castlereau." See the Ordnance Map of the county of Roscommon, sheets 20, 26. See also the Annals of Ulster and the Four Masters, at the year 1225, where it is stated that the English and the people of Munster, having gone into the province of Connacht to attack O'Neill (who had gone thither to assist the sons of Ruaidhri O'Conchobhair), attempted to plunder this church of Tearmann Caelaimne, but that they were slaughtered through the miracles of the saint. We are, however, informed by the Annals of Kilro-nan, that in the year 1236 the Justiciary of Ireland went to Connacht to assist William Burke, and succeeded in burning Tearmann Caelaimne, in despite of the people, regardless of the sanctity of the place. See Mac Firlbisigh's Genealogies of the Irish Saints, p. 733, and an Inquisition, taken on the 27th of May, 1617, which finds that "Termon-Kealand" belonged to the monastery of Roscommon. See Tribes and Customs of the Uí Fiachrach, page 153, note u. We have still sufficient evidence to prove the extent of the country of the Ciarraidhe of Connacht. It comprised the whole of the present barony of Clannorris, in the county of Mayo, except the Tearmann of Balla; also that portion of the barony of Costello belonging to the archdiocese of Tuam, namely, the parishes of Aghamore, Knock, Bekan, and Annagh, which was called Ciarraidhe Locha na n-Airneadh; the district of Ciarraidhe Aei, now Clann Ceithearnaigh (O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 46), in Roscommon, extending, according to the most intelligent of the natives, from the bridge of "Cloonalis," near Castlereau, westwards to "Cloon-eane," where it adjoins the county of Mayo, and from "Clooncan" to Cluain Creamhchoille, "Clooneraffield," where it adjoins the territory of Airteach, and thence in the other direction to "Cloonaf," adjoining Lord Mountsandrord's demesne; and also Ciarraidhe Airtich, which is still well known, and comprises the parishes of Tibohine and Kilnamanagh, in the modern grand jury barony of "Frenchpark," in the north-west of the county of Roscommon.

§ Great the tribute. It will be observed that the kings of Connacht contrived to make the Ciarraidhe and other tribes, who had migrated from Munster, pay more than a rateable tribute for their territory. See the tribute paid by the Luighne, the descendants of Cormac Gaileanga, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster, and by the Dealbhua, who were of the race of Cormac Cas, son of the same Oilioll. See note ^o, p. 106, infra.

^b Luighne.—These derived their name and origin from Luigh, son of Cormac Gaileang, just mentioned, and were otherwise called Gaileanga from the cognomen of their ancestor. The exact limits of their territory are preserved in those of the diocese of Achadh Chonaire (Achonry) in the counties of Sligo and Mayo. The name Luighne is still preserved in that of the barony of "Leyny" in the county of Sligo, which was the territory of the family of O'h-Ara (O'Hara); and that of Gaileanga, their alid's name, in that of the barony of "Gallen," in the county of Mayo; but these modern baronies do not comprise all the territory of the Luighne or Gaileanga, for we have the clearest evidence that the entire of Sliabh Lugha, which forms about the northern half of the barony of Costello, belonged to O'Gadhra (O'Gara) and was a part of the country of the Luighne or Gaileanga. On the increasing power of the Anglo-Norman families of Jordan de Exeter, and Nangle or Costello, the O'Gadhras were driven out of their original territory, and they acquired a new settlement for themselves in the territory of the Greagraidhe ("Coolavin," as already stated).

ⁱ But the grass and the land.—The territory of Luíghne or Gaileanga (for they were originally synonymous) anciently belonged to an enslaved tribe of the Firbolgs (called "Gaileans" and "Damnonians"), who inhabited this territory down to the third century, when Cormac Gaileang, after having incurred the censure of his father Tadhg, in Munster, fled thither and obtained a grant of this Firbolg territory from his kinsman Cormac mac Airt, monarch of Ireland, subject, however, to the heavy tributes which had been paid by the dispossessed Aitheach Tuatha (Attacots). See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, c. 69.

^k Corca.—The Editor knows no tribe of this name in Connacht except Corca Achlann and Corca Firtri, who were both of the royal race of Eochaidh Muightheadhan, and Corca Mogha (in Ui Maine), descended from Buan, the son of the druid Mogh Ruith; D. Mac Fírb. MS. Geneal. p. 535. That district is now supposed to be co-extensive with the parish of Kilkerrin, near Dunmore, in the north of Galway; but this small territory could not have paid the immense tribute mentioned in the text.

^l King of Magh Aei.—The king of Connacht was so called from the situation of his palace of Cruachain in the Plain of Magh Aei, or Campus Connacia, now Machaire Chonnacht, a beautiful plain in the county of Roscommon, extending from near the town of Roscommon to the verge of the barony of Boyle, and from the bridge of "Cloonfree," near Strokestown, westwards to Castlereagh. These are the present limits of this plain, according to tradition, but it would appear from the position of Ciarraidhe Aei, that this plain extended farther to the west.

^lNo light award.—The Irish word bán is used to denote blank in such compounds as the present; as bán-máthom, a defeat caused by panic or terror, without shedding blood; bán-máirepa, i. e. martyrdom effected by subduing the passions, without shedding blood.

ⁿDealbhna.—The Dealbhna (Delvins) are descended from Sumann, son of Lugbaidh Dealbhaeth, the third son of Cas, ancestor of the family of O'Briain, of North Munster. Their possessions in Connacht comprised the present barony of "Moycullen" in the county of Galway, which was anciently called Dealbhna Feadhá, and Dealbhna Tire da Loch, from its situation between Loch Oirbsean (Corrib), and Loch Lurgan, or the Bay of Galway; Dealbhna Cuile Fabhair, otherwise called Muintir Fathaidh, situate on the east side of Loch Corrib, and comprising fourteen Bailes or townlands, which belonged to the family of O'Fathartaigh, "Faherty;" and Dealbhna Nuadhat, seated between the rivers Suca (Suck) and Sionnain (Shannon); nearly all included in the barony of "Athlone," in the county of Roscommon. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 82; and Annals of the Four Masters, at the years 751, 816, 1142; D. Mac Firisigh's Genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), p. 345; and Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 83. The family of Mac Conroi (now "King"), O'h-Adhnaidh (Hyney), and O'Fathartaigh (O'Faherty), were the chief families of this race after the establishment of surnames. The tribe of Dealbhna Nuadhat sank under the Ui Maine before the establishment of surnames. The last notice of them, in the Annals of the Four Masters, occurs under the year 751. There were other territories called Dealbhna, in the ancient Meath, concerning whom see notes further on.

° It is not for ignobility of the men, that is, although the Dealbna pay a great tribute to the king of Connacht, they are not regarded by him as slaves, as were the Fírbolg tribes who preceded them, because they are of the royal blood of Munster; but having, by consent of the king, settled in lands subject to heavy tribute at the period of their settlement, they were obliged to pay the tributes which had been rendered by their enslaved predecessors.—See Tribes and Customs of the Uí Maine, p. 85, note f.

of the Dealbhna Nuadhat, who possessed the territory lying between the rivers Suca (Suck) and Sionnain (Shannon), till about the beginning of the ninth century, when they were vanquished and enslaved by the celebrated warrior Cathal, son of Oilioll, king of Ui Maine.—Ibid.

^q For their country, that is, because the Ui Maine (Nepotes Manii, the Ulster tribe) were permitted by the king of Connacht to subdue the Firbolgs, who paid the tribute of an enslaved people. The former, therefore, were obliged to pay the same tribute, though they were considered noble, as being of the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles.

race of Muireadhach Muilleathan, king of Connacht. See the Introduction. After the establishment of surnames, the principal families of this race, who were the most distinguished of the Uí Briuin, were those of O'Conchobhair (O'Conors) of Magh Aei, kings of Connacht; of Mac Diarmaid (Mac Dermots) of Magh Lurg (Moylurg); of Mac Oireachtaigh (Geraghtys), chiefs of Muintir Roduibh; of O'Fionnachtaigh, chiefs of Clanna Conmhuighe (Clanconway); and various other collateral families.

¹ Uí Fíachrach.—There were two tribes of this name in Connacht, descended from Fíachra, the brother of the Irish monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages. The more powerful tribe of the name, the northern Uí Fíachrach, possessed the present baronies of "Carra," "Erris," and "Tirawley," in the county of Mayo, and the barony of Tir Fíachrach (Tireragh), in the county of Sligo. After the establishment of surnames, the families of O'Dubhda and O'Caemhain were the most distinguished of this tribe.—See the Tribes and Customs, &c., of the Uí Fíachrach, passim. The other Uí Fíachrach of Connacht, the Uí Fíachrach Aidhne (south Uí Fíachrach), were seated in the south-west of the county of Galway, and their territory was exactly co-extensive with the diocese of Cill Mhic Duach (Kilmacduagh), as we learn from the Life of St. Colman Mac Duach (H. 2, 16, p. 495), who was their patron, and all whose territory was placed by Guaire Aidhne, king of Connacht, in his bishopric about the year 610. "Conio ir in maigín rin ro focharigeaó Cell míc Duac, conio leir Áiúne uile, acurclann Shuairne mic Colmán orrin amác co bpaí," i. e. "So that in that place was founded Cill Mic Duach, so that all Aidhne, and the race of Guaire, son of Colman, belong to him [Mac Duach] for ever." The principal families of this tribe after the establishment of surnames, were those of O'h-Eidhin (O'Heynes), O'Clerigh (O'Clerys), and Mac Giolla Ceallaigh (Kilkellys), who were descended from king Guaire Aidhne, and of O'Seachnasaigh (O'Shaughnessys), who sprung from Aedh, the uncle of king Guaire. St. Colman, the patron saint of this tribe, was the son of Duach, who was the son of Ainmire, son of Conall, son of Eoghan Aidhne, the ancestor of the Uí Fiachrach Aidhne.

^u Cineal Aedha, i. e. the tribe of Aedh. This was the tribe-name of O'Seachnasaigh, a subsection of the Uí Fiachrach Aidhne. Most modern writers have spoken of the Cineal Aedha and Uí Fiachrach Aidhne as if they were a different race, but the most ancient pedigrees make the Cineal Aedha a subdivision of the Uí Fiachrach Aidhne. This incorrectness became general among the Irish writers. After the English invasion O'h-Eidhin and O'Seachnasaigh became independent of each other, when the former, being the senior, and of the race of Guaire, took the title of chief of the Uí Fiachrach Aidhne, and the latter the title of chief of Cineal Aedha.

^v For the sake of stipend.—That is, these tribes were considered the king's relatives, and they were not bound to serve the king in his wars except for pay; and if any of them were killed in battle while in the service of the king of Connacht, the king was to pay to his tribe mulct or eric for him, according to his dignity. This was a great privilege enjoyed by the descendants of the brothers of the monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages in Connacht.

^w I shall state it as it is.—The writer had probably an older poem before him, which he shaped into such form as to describe the tribes as they stood in his own, not in St. Benean's time. See the Introduction.

Whenever kingship shall not be in the north
 With the race of Fiachra and the noble Guaire,
 They are entitled,—it is no trifling privilege,
 To sit by the side of the supreme-king of Connacht.

Should it happen that a good man of them
 Should leave his territory through injustice,
 To sit by the side of the king of whatsoever province
 Is the right of each king of their kings.

Well has Benean exactly found
 This knowledge—it is no injustice;
 I shall state it as it is^w,
 Ye noble people, hear it ! . . . HEARKEN TO A HISTORY.

OF THE STIPENDS of the chieftainries of Connacht here from the supreme king of Cruachain: for it is for the lands and stipends they pay tributes, and not for ignobility of race, for the chiefs of all are noble brethren. And it is in right of that [i. e. their equality of blood] that every one of them may approach to assume all sovereignty and kingship alike, if not debarred by the defilement of the slaying of a kinsman, or the oppressing of saints, or the renouncement of baptism, and it is by these alone his right to sovereignty should depart from him: and hence it is that they pay tribute to and receive stipend from a [regal] house which has not turned back or separated from God.

The king of Siol Muireadhaigh is entitled to the ring and dress of the king of Connacht, and to his shield and sword and armour.

Five steeds and five swords and five ships and five coats of mail to the king of Umhall.

Six shields and six swords and six steeds and six tunics and six drinking-horns to the king of Greagraidhe.

Ten steeds and ten cloaks and ten drinking-horns and ten hounds to the king of Luighne.

Five steeds and five matal and five swords, five coats of mail, two rings, ten steeds, ten swords and five drinking-horns and ten bondmen and ten chess-boards to the king of Ui Briuin.

Three drinking-horns and three swords and three steeds and ten rings and ten chess-boards to the king of the northern Ui Fiachrach.

Seven bondmen and seven bondwomen and seven drinking-horns and three swords and three hounds to the king of Cineal Aedha.

Three tunics and three drinking-horns and three steeds to the king of Partraidhe.

Thus are estimated the worthiness and the title to stipends of the kings of the territories of Connacht. Of them the gifted son Benaen composed this [poem].

THE STIPENDS of the province of Connacht

In a fair book I have seen,

Which are given to his chieftainries in the north

By the king of Connacht, head of the great host.

Entitled is the man who is best of them

Of the Siol Muireadhaigh^x from the king

To a ring and a dress and a steed,

To a shield, sword and coat of mail.

Entitled is the king of Umhall^y, without condition,

To five steeds in his country without heaviness,

Five polished swords of battle,

Five ships, five coats of mail.

Entitled is the king of Dealbhna^z of Druim Leith

To six swords and six shields,

Six steeds, six tunics, with gold [ornaments],

And six drinking-horns for banquets.

Entitled is the king of fair Greagraidhe^a

To six weapons and six tunics,

Six bondmen, six bondwomen,

Six completely beautiful coats of mail.

^c Ui Maine.—See p. 106, note p, suprà.

^d Horses, Gabhra.—It is stated in Cormac's Glossary, that when this word is applied to a horse it should be written with an o; and indeed it generally is, but the scribes here have Gabhar in the text of both copies of the Book of Rights. Cormac says: "Gabhar, written with an a, quasi ca-per; but when written with an o it is applied to a horse, and it is said to be a corruption of the Welsh 'Goor.'" [Quare gorwydd?] The author of the Life of Aedh or St. Aidus, published by Colgan, at 28th February, translates Lochgabhra by stagnum equi; and Colgan remarks (note 14, p. 422) that gabhar is a very ancient Scotie and British word for equus, which is each in modern Irish.

^e Luighne.—See p. 103, note h, suprà.

Entitled is the king of hospitable Conmaicne^b
 To ten drinking-horns on going into his drinking-house,
 Ten swift steeds on which to mount,
 Two rings and two chess-boards.

Entitled is the king of Uí Maine^c the illustrious
 To seven cloaks, seven horses^d over the valley,
 Seven hounds for the purpose of the chase
 And seven deep-red tunics.

Entitled is the king of Luighne^e of the heroes
 To ten steeds, ten cloaks,—not silly,
 Ten drinking-horns for quaffing mead,
 Ten beautiful white-skinned hounds.

Entitled is the king of Uí Briuin^f of fame
 To five steeds and five matala,
 Five swords, ten crooked drinking-horns,
 Ten bondmen, ten chess-boards.

Entitled is the king of the Corca^g of the wood
 To five war-horses and five matala,
 Five swords not to be resisted by a bone,
 Five coats of mail against bare javelins.

Entitled is the king of Partraidhe^h of the port
 To three drinking-horns, three swords as his share,
 Three tunics and three steeds
 From the king of Cruachain without any concealment.

^h Partraidhe.—This is still the name of a well-known territory in the county of Mayo. It forms the western portion of the barony of “Carra,” and is now believed to be co-extensive with the parish of Odbhha Ceara (Ballovey, also “Partry”), in which there is a range of mountains called Sliabh Partraidhe (Anglicè Slieve Partry); but it would appear from Giolla Iosa Mor Mac Fír-bisigh of Leacan, that this territory was originally more extensive.—See Tribes and Customs of the Uí Fiachrach, pp. 47, 152, 187, 189, 202. See also O’Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. xi., where mention is made of three territories of this name, viz.: “Partrigia” of Ceara, which is the one just described; “Partrigia” of the Lake, in which is situated the abbey of Cong, and the

¹ It has already been explained that these headings are not in the original. They are merely used to make breaks, and to mark the order of the work; and it will here be observed that the province of Ulster, unlike the other provinces, was at this period divided into three great territories, Aileach, Oirghialla, and Uladh, governed by three chief kings, each independent of the other.

III.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KINGS OF AILEACH, OF THE OIRGHIALLA, AND OF ULADH.

III.—1. THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF AILEACH^a.

The tributes of the king of Aileach and his stipends here, and^b his tributes from his territories, and his stipends to them.

⁴ Aileach.—(Ely, Greenan-Ely) a fort, with remains in stone, in Donegal, near Lough Swilly, and on the isthmus dividing it from Lough Foyle, barony of Inishowen. The remains of Grianan Ailigh (the palace of Aileach), which was the palace of the kings of the northern Ui Neill (Nepotes Neilli) is minutely described in the Ordnance Memoir of the parish of Templemore. See also Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 181, note 169: "A priscis scriptoribus Aileach Neid hodie vulgo Ailech appellatur. Fuit perantiqua Regum Hiberniæ sedes et post tempora fidei per eosdem derelicta, Temoriá denuḡ repetitá et restauratá.

⁵ Forthuatha, i. e. strange tribes who settled in the province, not of the king's own race.

⁶ Cuileantraidhe.—This territory is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1156, but nothing has yet turned up to show its exact situation.

⁷ Tuath Ratha.—(Anglicè, Tooraah) a territory in the north-west of the county of Fermanagh, all included in the present barony of "Magheraboy." After the establishment of surnames, the family of O'Flanagain (O'Flanagans) were the chieftains of this territory, but tributary to Mac Uidhir (Maguire).

^b The men of Lurg.—The inhabitants of the barony of Lurg, in the north of the county of Fermanagh, are still so called. After the establishment of surnames the family of O'Maelduin (O'Muldoons) were the chiefs of this territory, but tributary to head chiefs of Fermanagh.

ⁱ Ui Fiachrach.—These were the people called by the Irish annalists Ui Fiachrach Arda Sratha (of "Ardstraw"). They were seated along the river Dearg, in the north-west of the county of Tyrone, and their district comprised the parish of "Ardstraw," and some adjoining parishes, now belonging to the see of Derry. Ussher states (Primordia, p. 857) that the church of Ardstraw, and many other churches of Opheathrach [O'Fiachrach] were taken from the see of Clogher, and incorporated with that of Derry. This tribe of Ui Fiachrach are to be distinguished from those of Connacht, already mentioned, p. 108, note ^l, suprà; these were of the people called Oirghialla, and descended from Fiachrach, son of Earc, the eldest son of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 76.

bacon, in the Book of Leacan, fol. 165, and muc íralti, a salted pig, in a Glossary in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, and translated lardum, by O'Colgan, in his version of Brogan's metrical life of St. Bridget, Trias Thaum. p. 516, line 23. It is translated a sheep in Vallancey's Collectanea, vol. iii. p. 514, but that was a mere guess. It will be observed that the prose here differs from the verse, the former having three hundred hogs (torc), three hundred cows (bó), and three hundred weathers (molte); and the latter three hundred cows (bó), a hundred beeves, and a hundred timni. The word is sometimes used, like the modern pine, to denote a ring of a chain, as timne arghaid, a ring of silver.—Cormac's Glossary, voce Duar; timne óir, a ring of gold.—Irish Calendar, 17th June. It is quite evident from the text of this poem that timne is intended to denote some animal; and the bacán of the Book of Leacan, and the lardum of Colgan, prove to a certainty that it means a hog killed and salted.

^k Uí Mic Caerthainn, i. e. the descendants of Forgo, son of Caerthainn, who was son of Earc, grandson of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland. The territory inhabited by this sept was called Tir mic Caerthainn, a name still retained in that of the barony of Tir Chaerthainn, Anglicè "Tirkeerin," in the west of the county of Derry. O'Flaherty, in his Ogygia, part iii. c. 76, very correctly describes this tribe as "near the Bay of Lough Fevail" [Feabhail, Anglicè Foyle], which washes the county of Derry, dividing it from the county of Donegal.

^l The Cianachta, Chein Iochta, i. e. the race of Cian, who was the son of Oilíoll Olum, king of Munster in the third century. The district is now the barony of "Keenacht." Before the family of O'Cathain (O'Kane) increased in numbers and power, this territory was in the possession of O'Conchobhair of Gleann Geimhin (O'Conor of Glengiven), descended from Fionnachd Uallach, son of Connla, son of Tadhg, son of Cian; and though so displaced (in the twelfth century) the family was never

A hundred beeves from the Uí Mic Caerthainn^k
 And a hundred hogs,—'tis not very trifling,

Three hundred hogs by which the north is replenished,
 Three hundred cows to feed the host,
 Three hundred beeves, wealth for war, rooted out, for the "O'Conors" are still numerous in "Glengiven," which was the ancient name of the vale of the river Roa (Roe), near "Dungiven," which flows through the very centre of this Cianachta. —See Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i. p. 103. It is curious to observe the great amount of the tribute paid to the king of Aileach by this exotic tribe of the race of Eilbhear, from Munster.

^m The people of Li, called Fir Li and Fir Li of the Bann. They were descended from Laeghaire, son of Fiachra Tort, son of Eochaidh, who was son of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland, in the fourth century. See Ogygia, part iii. c. 76. The country possessed by this sept was sometimes called Magh Lí, and sometimes translated Leao-ran fines [Trias Thaum. p. 146], and is described in the Book of Leacan as extending from Bir to Camus. That it was on the west side of the river Bann appears from the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 9th January, which places in it the church of Achadh Dubhthaigh (Aghadowey) a parish on the west side of the Bann, in the barony of "Coleraine." Thus: "Ἐαυρε θεαῖ ὁ Ἀχαδὸς Οὐβῆαιγῆ Μοιγῆ Ζίφορ ἑρῦ Ἰαμμα, i. e. Guaire Beag from Achadh Dubhthaigh in Magh Li, on the brink of the Banna." But, on the increasing power of the family of O' Cathain, the Fir Li were driven across the Bann, and were unquestionably on the east side of it at the period of the English invasion. In the translation of the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, Colgan errs egregiously in placing this territory, and the mountain of Sliabh Callainn (Slieve Gallion), on the east side of the Bann; for, though the people were on the east side of the river in Colgan's, not St. Patrick's time, the mountain, fortunately, remains in its original position, and still shows that Colgan mistranslated his original.—See Trias Thaum. pp. 146, 48; also the Editor's translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 58, note ^b, and Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i., article "Dunseverick," p. 362.

¹⁸ Dun na h-Uidhre.—There is no place of this name now in the territory of Uí Tuirtre.

¹⁹ Of Magh.—The prose has Magh Itha, which is correct. It is an extensive plain in the barony of “Raphoe,” Donegal. The church of “Donaghmore,” near the little town of Castlefinn, is mentioned in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick (lib. ii. c. 114), as in this plain. See Colgan, Trias Thaum. p. 144, and p. 181, note 163, where its position is described by Colgan as follows: “Per regionem Magh-ithe, c. 114. Est regioncula campestris Tir-Conallie ad ripam fluminis Finnei.” According to the bardic accounts of Ireland, this plain derived its name from Ith, the uncle of Milidh of Spain, who was slain there by the Tuatha de Danaan.—See Keating.

^s Craebh.—This territory, which in latter ages belonged to a branch of the family of O' Cathain (O' Kane), who were called Fir na Craeibhe, is situate on the west side of the lower Bann, and its position is defined by the cataract of Eas Craeibhe, i. e. the cataract of Craebh, the daughter of Eoghan mac Duirtheacht, who lived in Dun Da Bheann, now Mount Sandle, and was drowned in this cataract, now called "the Cutts fishery," near Coleraine. O'Flaherty's Oggia, p. iii., c. 3. His words are: "Banna inter Leam et Elliam, præter Clanbresail regionem scaturiens per Neachum lacum transiens Ændromensem agrum et Fircriviam (Ἴρῖρ να κραοῖβε) Scrinianque in Londinodorinsi agro intersecat, et tertio a Culraniâ et Cataractâ Eascribe lapide se in Oceanum transfundit totius Europæ longè fœcundissimus." This was exactly the position of the Fir Li in the time of St. Patrick; and it is now difficult to determine where the Fir na Craeibhe were seated at the time this poem was composed. According to tradition in the country the sept called Fir na Craeibhe, which is not incorrectly interpreted "men of the branch," were seated at "Binbradagh, near Dungiven;" this could not have been the case till they dispossessed the more ancient owners of Gleann Geimhin, as above mentioned. See Annals of the Four Masters, at the years 1118, 1192, 1205.

²⁶ Race of Conall, i. e. the inhabitants of Tir Chonaill; see p. 34, note p, suprà.

There is not due from Inis Eoghain^u
 A tribute to the chief king, nor gratuity,
 There is not due of the race of Conall^v
 A tribute, or custom, or white (unwrought) wool.

Those are the tributes of the king of Aileach ;
 No one is learned who does not well know them ;
 No king is entitled to reign or rule
 Who does not maintain his right. THE RIGHT.

THESE ARE the payments and stipends of the king of Aileach to his chieftainries and tribes, for refection and escort.

The king of Aileach himself, then, when he is not king of Eire, is entitled to sit by the side of the king of Eire at banquet and at fair, and to go before the king of Eire at treaties and assemblies and councils and supplications.

And he is entitled to receive from the king of Eire fifty swords and fifty shields and fifty bondmen and fifty dresses and fifty steeds: these for the king of Aileach. He distributes his stipends thus:

Five shields, five swords and five drinking-horns and five women and five bondmen and five steeds to the king of Cairbre Droma Cliabh.

Five shields, five bondmen, five women, five swords to the king of the Cineal Aedha of Eas Ruaidh.

Six steeds, six shields six swords, six drinking-horns, six blue cloaks and six green cloaks to the king of the Cineal Boghaine.

Five steeds, five shields, five swords and five cloaks, five coats of mail to the king of the Cineal Eanna.

Seven women, seven bondmen, seven steeds, seven swords to the king of the Cineal Lughdhach.

Seven bondmen, seven women, seven swords, seven drinking-horns to the king of Inis Eoghain.

Six steeds, six drinking-horns, six swords, six shields, six hounds to the king of Magh Iotha.

After the establishment of surnames we find settled there the families of O'Maeldoraidh (O'Muldorys), O'Canannain (O'Canannans), O'Domhnaill (O'Donnells), O'Buighill (O'Boyles), O'Galchobhair (O'Gallaghers), O'Dochartaigh (O'Dohertys), and various other collateral tribes who are still numerous in the county.

^u Cairbre of Druim Cliabh.—This district is now the barony of "Carbury" in the north of the county of Sligo. It is called of Druim Cliabh (Drumcliff), from a famous monastery erected there in the sixth century by St. Colum Cille. The ancient inhabitants of this territory were descended from Cairbre, the third son of Niall of the Nine Hostages. It is curious to observe, that it was considered a part of Ulster, and tributary to the king of Aileach, when this poem was written.—See Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 110, Trias Thaum. p. 144, and Genealogies, Tribes, &c. of the Uí Fiachrach, p. 278.

^v Cineal Aedha, i. e. the race of Aedh, commonly Anglicized "Hugh." This sept

of the race of Conall Gulban was seated in the territory of Tir Aedha, the now barony of "Tirhugh," in the south-west of the county of Donegal. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, O'h-Aedha (now Anglicè "Hughes") was the chief of this territory, which was called the Triocha or Cantred of Eas Ruaidh, from the great cataract of that name.—See p. 34, note 9, suprà, and Battle of Magh Rath, p. 157, note ^u.

^w Cineal Boghaine, i. e. the race of Eanna Boghaine, who was the second son of Conall Gulban, the progenitor of all the Cineal Conaill. Their country was called Tir Boghaine, and is included in the present barony of "Banagh," in the west of the county of Donegal. This territory is described in the Book of Feanach (Fenagh), fol. 47, a, a, as extending from the river Eidhneach (Eany), which falls into the harbour of Inbhear Naile (Inver—the bay of Donegal), to the stream of Dobhar, which flows from the rugged mountains.—See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 156, note p. The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 40, places the mountain of Sliabh Liag in this territory.—See Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 135.

^x Cineal Eanna, i. e. the race of Eanna, the youngest son of Niall of the Nine Hostages. The position of the territory of this tribe is described by Colgan as follows, in a note on the Life of "St. Baithenus:—" Est in Tir Conalliâ inter duo maris Brachia, nempe inter sinum Loch-Febhuil et sinum de Suilech et ab hoc Enna possessam fuisse et nomen sumpsisse tradunt acta Conalli fratris eiusdem Ennæ, et alia passim domesticæ hystoriæ."—Acta SS. p. 370, note 14. The parish of "Taughboyne," Ἐαῖτ Ἰαεῖτῖν (i. e. the house of "St. Baithenus"), in the barony of "Raphoe," is in this territory, as appears from Colgan, loc. cit. It is stated in the will of Domhnall O'Galchobhair (Donnell O'Gallagher), steward to the celebrated Aedh Ruadh O'Domhnail (Red Hugh O'Donnell), who died in 1602, that this territory contained thirty quarters of land. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, "Mag Dubhain" was the chief of this territory.

^k Battle of Achadh Leith-dheirḡ.—This battle was fought A. D. 332. The place is mentioned by Tighearnach as situate in that part of the country of the Oirghialla called Fearn-mhagh, the now barony of "Farney," in the county of Monaghan. The Editor, when he visited the county of Down several years since, thought that it might be "Aghaderg near Loughbrickland," but he has been long since convinced that this is an error, inasmuch as Fearn-mhagh is unquestionably the present barony of Farney, in the county of Monaghan, and the parish of "Aghderg," At veapḡ, i. e. the red ford, is in the country into which the ancient Ultonians were driven, and of which they retained possession. The battle was fought many miles to the west of Gleann Righe, which is the vale of the Newry river, beyond which the Ultonians were driven; and it is remarked in the accounts of the battle of Achadh Leith-dheirḡ, that they never extended their kingdom beyond it, for that a

They are entitled, too, to the third part of every [casual] revenue from the king of Eire, for instance, the third part of the Borumha, that is, the king of Uladh's share after the overthrow of the men of Uladh, in the battle of Achadh Leith-dheirg^k, by the Three Collas; and the seat of the king of the Oirghialla, next the seat of the king of Eire, at Tailte and at Uisneach and at the feast of Samhain [at Teamhair or Tara] and the distance [between them] is such that his sword would reach the hand of the king of Eire; and it belongs to him to present every third drinking-horn that is brought to the king of Teamhair. The third part of what he is entitled to get from the king of Eire the race of Colla Meann are entitled to receive from him on account of his having been a mighty man. The same portion which the king of the Oirghialla receives from the king of Eire, his queen is entitled to receive from the queen of the king of Eire. Of these Banean composed this [poem]:

HEARKEN ! that ye may hear
The history which I relate:

They are entitled, too, to a third of every levy [of tribute or prey] from the king of Aileach, and one-third of that third is due to the descendants of Colla Meann; and the seat of the king of the Oirghialla is near the seat of the king of Tailte; and its distance from him is, that the sword of the king of Oirghialla should reach the top of his (the king's) butler's hands; and to him belongs the presenting of every third drinking-horn which is brought to the king of Teamhair. His queen is entitled to the same privilege. And for them did Banean sing this work below:

definite boundary was formed on this side of Gleann Ríghle, from Newry upwards [i. e. northwards]. See MS. cited p. 36, n. e, suprà. This boundary still remains in tolerable preservation, and is now known in Irish by the name of Gleann na Muice Duibhe, i. e. "the valley of the black pig," and "the Danes' Cast" in English.

^k A hosting of three fortnights.—This differs but little from the service of a knight's fee in the feudal system, by which the knight was bound to attend the king in his wars for forty days every year.—Coke upon Littleton, ss. 75, 76, and Blackstone's Commentaries, book i. c. 13. See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 67, where it is stated that if the king of Connacht should continue longer than six weeks on an expedition, the forces which he had levied in Ui Maine (who were, as is there shown, an offset of the Oirghialla) might return home.

^l Nor during the Autumn.—See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 67, where it is stated that the tribes of that territory were freed from the hostings of Spring and Autumn, and that there was no power to ask them against their will. This is a very curious privilege, ceded or continued to a race after they had left their original province.

A hosting for three fortnights^k
Every three years.

Not in Spring they ever go,
This is what I have heard,
Nor at the beginning of Autumn^l
On the eve of reaping.

Seven hundred is their rising-out
On going forth from their territories,
Seven hundred^m [are given] to them, in return,
Of cows for the hosting;

A hosting across Oirghialla
Without respite for the debt,
Seven cumhalsⁿ to them are to be given
For it on the morrow.

If they should kill cattle,—
In poems it is mentioned,—

Brehon Laws to denote a full-grown cow.

It is stated in the tract already cited, p. 36, n. ^c, that the king of the Oirghialla was bound to go with his rising-out on an expedition with the monarch for six weeks every third year (but not in Spring or Autumn), and that each of their chieftains was paid twenty-one cows as wages, during that time.

ⁿ Seven cumhals.—A cumhal was a bondmaid, and her value was equal to that of three cows. Ware quotes an old Irish canon, which says: "Whoever shall presume to steal or plunder anything that belongs to the king or a bishop, or shall commit any outrage against them, or shall offer any contempt to them, he shall pay the price of seven bondwomen, or shall do penance with the bishop for seven years. See his work on the Antiquities of Ireland, c. xx. It is stated in the tract on Oirghialla just referred to, that if their country should be plundered while the forces of Oirghialla were away on an expedition with the monarch, the latter should give them six cows for every cow which had been carried away by the plunderers.

¹¹ Without a fetter or chain, i. e. when the hostage takes an oath, that is, as the prose has it, swears by the hand of the king, that he will not escape from his captivity, he is left without a fetter; but if he should afterwards escape, he then loses his caste, and is regarded as a perjured man. The tract on Oirghíalla states, that whenever the hostage of the Oirghíalla was fettered, golden chains were used for the purpose, and that it was hence they were called Oirghíalla, i. e. of the golden hostages.

¹² To the third of each profit. — See Tribes and Customs of the Uí Maine, pp. 63, 64, 65, where it is stated that the king

Though in such case he may escape,—

He is left without fetter, without chain^p.

If the hostage should elope,— According to the law of bondage of Connacht ceded the following emoluments to the people of that territory, who were a colony from the eastern or original Oirghialla, planted in Connacht after the establishment of Christianity, viz., the third part of every treasure found hidden or buried in the depths of the earth, and the third part of the eric for every man of their people that is killed, and the third part of every treasure thrown by the sea into the harbours of Connacht. There is a resemblance here to the Gallo-Norman fendal privileges of treasure-trove, jetsom, &c.

^r Colla Meann.—The race of Colla Meann were the inhabitants of Cricth Mughdhorn, “Cremorne,” in Monaghan, and not the mountainous country of “Mourne,” in the east of Ulster, as stated in O’Flaherty’s Ogygia, part iii. c. 76. The mountainous territory in the east of Ulster belonged to the ancient Ullta, not to the Oirghialla. From Colla Uais, the eldest of the brothers, the “Mac Donnells, Mac Dugalds, and Mac Allisters” of Scotland, with their

of the king of Ireland, and all the rest were the length of his hand and sword distant from the king. See the Banquet of Dun na n-Geadh, Battle of Magh Rath, p. 29. St. Bernard, in the Life of St. Malachy, says that the Oirghialla would not allow any bishop among them except one of their own family, and that they had carried this through fifteen generations; and he adds immediately after, that they had claimed the see of Ard Macha, and maintained possession of it for two hundred years, claiming it as their indubitable birth-right. See Colgan's Trias Thaum. pp. 801, 802.

 Hear, ye people of Fail of the Fians,
 The grand stipends of the Oirghialla.

Entitled is the majestic king of Oirghialla,
 From the king of Eire of the benign countenance,
 To free hostageship,—generous his engagement,
 To stipend and presents.

Nine hostages^w [are given] to the king of Fodhla truly
 By consent of the king of the Oirghialla, together
 To be kept by the king of Tlachtgha in the east, Without incarceration and without fettering.

A befitting attire for them,
 A steed, a sword with studs of gold,
 Secret confidence, elegant apartments
 For the comely hostages of the Oirghialla.

 Still worse for the king who will put on the fetter;
 Save that, no one is entitled to aught
 From the illustrious king of the Oirghialla.

Three shields, three swords, three drinking-horns,
 Three steeds, three women, great their merriment,
 To the king of Ui Niallain^x of shining fame
 From the king of Eire [Oirghialla] of the cold lakes.

was the chief of this tribe.

ter ages this territory was more usually called Clann Breasail (Anglicè Clambrazil). According to O'Dubhagain's Topographical Poem, the tribe of O'Gairbheath (O'Garveys) were the ancient chiefs of this territory, but in more modern times it belonged to the "Mac Canns," who are not of the Ui Niallain race, but descend from Rochadh, son of Colla Da Chrioch. This territory is shown on a map of Ulster made in the reign of Elizabeth (or James I.), as on the south of "Lough Neagh," where the upper Bann enters that lake, from which, and from the space given it, it appears to be co-extensive with the present barony of "Oneiland East." This view shows that in the formation of the baronies more than one territory was placed in that of "Oneiland;" and the fact is that all the eastern part of Oirghialla, called Oirthear, was occupied by sept of the race of Niallan, that district including the present baronies of East and West "Oneiland" and also those of East and West "Orior;" for the sept of O'h-Anluain (O'Hanlons), who possessed the two latter baronies, were descended from the aforesaid Niallan.

² Ui Eachach, i. e. the descendants of Eochaidh, son of Feidhlim, son of Fiachra Casan, son of Colla Da Chrioch. This tribe is to be distinguished from the Ui Eachach Uladh, or ancient inhabitants of the baronies of "Iveagh," in the county of Down, who were of the Clanna Rudhraidhe. They were a tribe of the Oirghialla, descended from Eochaidh, son of Cairbre Damh-airgid, chief of the Oirghialla in the time of Saint Patrick. This sept were seated in the district of Tuath Eachadha, i. e. Eochaidh's district, a territory comprised in the present barony of "Armagh." This district is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1498, and it is shown on the old Map of Ulster, already referred to, as "Toaghie," and represented as the country of "Owen mac Hugh mac Neale mac Art O'Neale."

³ Ui Meith, i. e. the descendants of Muireadhach Meith, the son of Iomchadh, who was the son of Colla Da Chrioch. There were two territories of this name in Oirghialla, one called sometimes Ui Meith Tire, from its inland situation, and sometimes Ui Meith Macha, from its contiguity to Armagh; and the latter Ui Meith Mara, from its contiguity to the sea. The latter was more anciently called Cualghne, and its name and position are preserved in the Anglicized name of "O'Meath," a district in the county of Louth, comprising ten

Entitled is the king of Ui Meith^a, the hero,
From the king of Macha (of Oirghialla) of great meetings

townlands, situate between Carlingford and Newry. The former, which is evidently the country of the Ui Meith referred to in Leabhar na g-Ceart, is a territory in the present county of Monaghan, comprising the parishes of "Tullycorbet, Kilmore, and Tehallan," in the barony of Monaghan. Colgan has the following note in editing the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. iii. c. 9:

"Regio dicta Hua-Meith hodiè O'Meith est in Orientali parte Ultoniæ, hinc Airthea, id est Orientalis dicta, et pars ejus mari vicinior Hua-Meith-mara, .i. Hua Methia maritima, et pars a mari remotior comparatione prioris Hua-Meith-tire, .i. Hua Methia terræ sive continentis quia continenti Ultoniæ jacet: hic et ab aliis priscis scriptoribus vocatur. Nomen illud Hua-Meith .i. posterorum Meith, videtur sortita a posteris Muredachí cognomento Meith, id est Obesi, filii Imchadii filii Colla-da-Chrioch; de quo Sanctilogium Genealogicum, c. 13, latè in eo tractu tempore Patricii et postea dominantibus: Trias Thaum. p. 184, n. 16.

From this note O'Flaherty, and from both Harris, in his edition of Ware's Antiquities, have concluded that "Hy-Meith-tire" was the barony of Orior (O'Hanlon's country) in the county of Armagh; but incorrectly, for we have irrefragable evidence to prove that Ui Meith Tire was much further to the west. 1. The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick places the church of Tegh-Thellain, i. e. Teach Theallain, Anglicè "Tehallan," in the barony of Monaghan, in regione de Hua-Meith-tire, a territory adjoining to regio Mugdornorum, which is the Latinized form of Criche Mughdhorna, "Cremorne," in Monaghan, in which the Tripartite Life places the church of Domhnach Maigbean (Douaghmoynce). 2. We learn from the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, at 26th January, that Tulach Carboid (Tullycorbet, in the said parish of Tehallan), was n-Uib Meir Macha, i. e. in Ui Meith Macha. 3. It appears from the same Calendar, that Cill Mor, the church of St. Aedhan mac Aenghusa, is in the territory of Ui Meith, and this is unquestionably the church of "Kilmore," near the town of Monaghan. 4. Colgan, Acta SS. p. 713, places the church of Mucnamh (Mucknoe), at Castleblayney, in this territory. Hence the conclusion is inevitable, that the territory of the Ui Meith Tire, Ui Meith Macha, was in the present county of Monaghan, and not in that of Armagh. We have, moreover, the authority of the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, to show that it met the barony of Cremorne at a place called Omna Renne, where their ancestor Muireadhach was interred. "Sepultus autem est [Muredachus] in confinibus Hwa Methiorum et Mugdornorum in loco Omna Renne nuncupato, qui licet sit in limitibus utriusque regionis ad jus tamen Mugdornorum spectat."—Vita Tripart. lib. iii., c. 11. Trias Thaum. p. 151.

All our modern writers, even to the present, have been led astray by the assumption that the Crioch Mughdhorna of the ancient writers is the present mountainous barony of "Mourne;" but as that territory is on the east side of the boundary at Gleann Ríge, it could not have been a part of "Oriell," and consequently not the country of the descendants of Mughdhorn Dubh, the son of Colla, which lay far west of Gleann Ríge. It appears from a pedigree of the "Mac Mahons," in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, that the mountainous district of Mourne in Uladh (which originally bore the appropriate appellation of Beanna Boirche, see p. 38, note 8, suprà), was so called from a tribe of the inhabitants of Crioch Mughdhorn in Oirghialla, who emigrated thither in the reign of Niall the Haughty, the son of Aeth, who was son of Magnus Mac Mathghabhna. See the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1457, where a range of heights in "Cremorne" is called Sliabh Mughdhorn, i. e. mons Mugdornorum. According to O'Dubhagain the tribes of O' h-Innreachtaigh (O'Haurattys) were the ancient chiefs of Ui Meith Macha, and this is confirmed by the tradition in the country which remembers that they were the ancient chieftains of this part of the county of Monaghan before they were dispossessed by the sept of Mac Mathghabhna (Mac Mahons). It also adds that Maeldoid, the patron saint of Mucnamh (Mucknoe, at Castle Blayney), was of the same stock as the Ui Inreachtaigh (O'Haurattys), the ancient dynasts of the district. This curious tradition is fully borne out by the following note in Colgan's Trias Thaum., p. 184, on

To four swords, four drinking-horns,
Four cloaks, four iron-grey steeds.

^b Ui Dortain.—These were otherwise called Ui Tortain, i. e. the descendants of Dortan or Tortan, son of Fiach, son of Feidhlim, son of Fiachra, who was son of Colla Da Chrioch. This was in that part of Oirghialla included in the present county of Meath, in which the celebrated old tree called Bile Tortan, which stood near “Ardbraccan”, was situate. See O’Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 60; Book of Baile an Mhuta, fol. 229, b.; Colgan, Trias Thaum. p. 129, c. ii.; and p. 184, n. 23, 24; and Feilire Aenghuis, 8 July.

^c Ui Briuin Archoill, i. e. the descendants of Brian of Archoill, who was the son of Muireadhach Meith, the progenitor of the Ui Meith. See Dubhaltach Mac Firsibigh’s genealogical work, p. 309.—Colgan thinks that this was the district in Tyrone called Muintir Birn in his own time, which is a district shown on the old map of Ulster, already referred to, as a district in the south of the barony of “Dungannon,” adjoining the territory of “Trough,” in the county of Monaghan, and “Toaghie,” now the barony of Armagh. See Trias Thaum., p. 184, n. 2. In St. Patrick’s time the Oirghialla had possession of the present county of Tyrone, but they were gradually displaced by families of the race of Eoghan, the son of Niall of the Nine Hostages.

It is shown on the old map of Ulster, already often referred to, as "the countrie of Cormac Mac Barone" [O'Neill]. The River Blackwater is represented as running through it, and the fort of Augher and the village of Ballygawley as in it; the town of Clogher on its western, and the church of Errigal Keroge on its northern boundary. O'Caemhain was the chief of this territory according to O'Dubhagain.

^d Race of Creamhthann, i. e. the descendants of Creamhthann, son of Fiach, son of Deaghaidh Duirn, son of Rochadh, son of Colla Da Chrioch. This Creamhthann was chief of the Oirghialla, and his descendants were very celebrated. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 76. Colgan informs us that the territory of the race of Creamhthann was known in his own time, and considered as included in the barony of "Slane," [in Meath].

III. 3.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF ULADH.

OF THE WAGES and of the stipends of Uladh here.

In the first place the king of Uladh, when he himself is not king of Eire, is entitled to be by the side of the king of Eire, and he is to hold the first place in his confidence and society while he is along with the king of Eire. And when he is departing he obtains fifty swords and fifty steeds and fifty cloaks and fifty cowls and fifty scings and fifty coats of mail and thirty rings and ten greyhounds and ten matals and ten drinking-horns and ten ships and twenty handfuls of leeks and twenty sea-gulls' eggs. All these are given to the king of Uladh every third year from the king of Eire.

Twenty drinking-horns and twenty swords and twenty greyhounds and twenty bondmen and twenty steeds and twenty cloaks and twenty matals and twenty cumhals from the king of Uladh to the king of Dal Araidhe.

Three steeds, three bondmen, three women, three ships to the king of Dal Riada.

the church of Eanach Conglais (Killany, in the barony of Farney), was in it. See Trias Thaum., p. 184, n. 21. It is also highly probable, if not absolutely certain, that the parish of Machaire Rois (Magh-cross), and that the town of Carraig Machaire Rois (Carrickmacross) were comprised in it.

³ Uladh — This was originally the name of the whole province of Ulster; but after the destruction of the palace of Eamhain Macha by the Three Collas in 332, it became the name of the eastern part of the province only, as already explained, p. 36, n. ^c. The exact extent of this circumscribed kingdom of the ancient Ullta will appear from this poem; but it must be observed that the Clann Colla intruded further upon their kingdom in a few centuries after. Colgan has the following note on this subject on the 31st chapter of Joceline's Life of St. Patrick, Trias Thaum. p. 109: "Tota provincia quæ hodiè Ultonia appellatur, prisicis temporibus sermone patrio nunc Ulta nunc from Fiacha Araidhe, king of all Ulster, A. D. 240. See Ussher's Primordia, p. 1047; O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 18.

^a Dal Riada, i. e. the tribe of Cairbre Riada, the son of Conaire II. monarch of Ireland, A. D. 212. Another branch of this tribe settled amongst the Picts, a fact mentioned by Bede.—Hist. Ecclesiast. lib. i. c. 1. Bede explains Dal in this compound as signifying part in the Scotie language, and the same explanation is given in Cornae's Glossary; but O'Flaherty says that it signifies with greater propriety an offspring (Ogygia, part iii. c. 63); and Charles O'Conor of Belanagare, in his edition of Ogygia Vindicated, p. 175, observes that "Dal properly signifies posterity or descent by blood," but that "in an enlarged and figurative sense it signifies a district, i. e. the division or part allotted to such posterity;" and he adds: "Of this double sense we have numberless instances; thus Bede's interpretation is doubtless, in the second sense, admissible."

Colgan, in his Annotations on the Life of St. Olean, at 20th February, has the following curious note on Dalredia, to which all modern writers, except Ussher, are indebted for what they have told us concerning this territory:

"Hæc regio nomen sortita est a perantiquâ et nobilissimâ familiâ Dalrieda dictâ, quæ nomen hoc suum quòd a progenitore accepit, regioni quam possedit impertit. Ea enim familia oriunda est ex quodam principe Hiberno, cui nomen Cabreus et cognomen Rifhoda secundum vocis etymon; secundum verò modum pronuntiandi Rioda, et nunc secundum vsun vulgarem et modum etiam scribendi Rioda, vel Rieda. Vnde huius progenies, Dal riêda, id est, stirps, seu propago Riedæ Hibernicè appellatur: Latine verò, ut Venerabili Bedæ placet, Dal Reudini; sed rectius Dalriedini appellantur. Fuit autem hæc progenies celebris et potens multis sæculis, non solum in prædictâ regione Hiberniæ, verum etiam in Albaniâ, quam hodiè communiter Scotiam vocamus. Hiberni enim prædicti regionis principe Rieda, seu vt Beda loquitur, Reuda duce, inuaserunt priùs insulas Hebridum et aliquas viciniore continentis Albanæ regiones, quas aliquamdiu possederunt, vt lib. i. hyst. cap. 1. docet Beda his verbis: 'Procedente autem tempore Britannia post Britones et Pictos tertiam Sco-

According to a letter written by Randal, Earl of Antrim, to Archbishop Ussher, the Irish Dalriada extended thirty miles from the River Buais (Bush) to the cross of Gleann Finneachta, now the village of Glynn, in the east of the county of Antrim. See Ussher's Primordia, p. 1029 ; and Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i. p. 362.

How long the posterity of Cairbre Riada remained powerful in this territory, or what family names they assumed after the establishment of surnames in the tenth century, we have no documents to prove, but it seems highly probable that they were driven out at an early period by the Clann Colla, for we find the Ui Tuitre and Fir Li, of whom O'Fhloinn (O'Lyn), a descendant of Colla Uais, was king, were in possession of all the territory of Dal Riada in 1177. The Fir Li, as has been already stated, were on the west side of the River Bann in the time of St. Patrick, but they were certainly on the east side of it when Sir John de Courcy invaded Ulster. However, we have no document to prove the exact period at which they established themselves in the country of the Dal Riada.

The name Dal Riada (or Reuda) is still preserved in the corrupted form of "Ruta," Anglicè "Roote," and "Route," a well-known district in the north of the county Antrim. See Ussher's Primordia, p. 611.

^u Oirthear, i. e. eastern. This is to be distinguished from Criche na n-Oirthear in Oirghialla (see p. 148, n. y), but its exact situation has not yet been determined.

^y Ui Dearca Chein.—Colgan says that this was the name of a valley in the barony of Antrim and diocese of Connor. See Trias Thaum. p. 183, note 221–223. The Ui Earca Chein are mentioned twice in the Annals of the Four Masters, first at the year 1199, and next at the year 1391, where it is mentioned that Mac Giolla Muire (Gillimurry), who was otherwise called Cu Uladh O'Morna, was chief of the Uí Earca Chein and Leath Chathail, from which it would appear that the two territories were conterraneous, which could not be the case if the former were in the barony of Antrim. Rymer mentions a "Mac Gil-mori dux de Auderkin," 3 Edw. I. 1275. At a later period the "Gilmers" were settled in Holywood. See Stuart's Armagh. The name occurs in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, part ii. c. 133, where it is stated that the Irish apostle erected there a church which was called Rath Easpuig Imic, from a Bishop Vinnocus, whom he placed over it. Trias Thaum, p. 147. According to the pedigree of this tribe, given by Dubhaltach Mac Firsigh, in his genealogical work (Lord Roden's copy), p. 205, the Uí Earca Chein are a Connacht tribe descended from Cruíne, son of Eoghan Sriabh, who was son of Duach Galach, king of Connacht, in the fifth century; but no account has been discovered of how or when they settled in Dal Araidhe. The descent of Cionaeth (Kenny) O'Morna, of this race, chief of Leath Chathail (Lecale) is thus given by Mac Firsigh (ubi supra):

"Cinaeth, son of Ruarcán, son of Mael-sneachta, a quo O'Morna, in Leth Chathail, is called, son of Fearchar, son of Oísen, son of Onchu, son of Broc, son of Aine, son of Sinell, son of Amergin, son of Cruíne, son of Eoghan Sriabh, son of Duach Galach."

It would appear from the same work, p. 508, that there was a more ancient line of Chiefs in Leath Chathail than the O'Mornas, and that this older line was of the ancient Ullta, or Clanna Rudhraidhe, and descended from Cathal, from whom Leath Chathail was named, the son of Muireadhach, son of Aenghus, son of Maelcobha, son of Fiachna, son of Deaman, king of Ulidia, or circumscribed Uladh, slain in the battle of Ardcoran in Dal Riada, A. D. 627. From the various references to this family of Mac Giolla Muire, alias O'Morna, occurring in the Irish Annals, and other documents, it is quite evident that they originally possessed the barony of "Lecale," a part of "Kinelarty," and the barony of "Upper Castlereagh," in the county of Down; but after the English invasion their territory was very much circumscribed by the encroachments of the families of the Whites and Savadges, and afterwards of the O'Neills of Clann Aedha Buidhe (Clannaboy), and Mac Artains. It would appear, however, from the Anglo-Irish Annals, that the "Mac Gilmories," or "Gilmors," were very stout opposers of the English in their original territory in the beginning of the fifteenth century. The two notices of this family following, which occur in Ware's Annals of Ireland, are sufficient to prove this fact:

"Anno 1407. A certain false fellow, an Irish man named Mac Adam Mac Gilmori, that had caused forty churches to be destroyed, who was never baptized, and therefore he was called Corbi [κοιρβει, wicked], took Patrick Savadge prisoner, and received for his ransom two thousand marks, and afterwards slew him together with his brother Richard."

It is difficult to say where the good and honest Ware got this passage, but it is quite evident that Coirbi does not mean unbaptized, and that Savadge had not so much money as 2000 marks in the world.

"Anno 1408. This year Hugh Mac Gil- more was slain in Carrickfergus, within the church of the Fryars Minors, which church he had before destroyed, and broke down the glass windows to have the iron bars through which his enemies, the Savages, had entered upon him."—Edition of 1705.

The O'Neill pedigree quoted by Dr. Stuart, in his History of Armagh, p. 630, states that the "Clannaboy" O'Neills gave to the Gilmors the lands of Holywood. The parish of Dundonald would also appear to have belonged to this tribe.

² Dal Buinne, i. e. the race of Buinne, son of Fearghus Mac Roigh, king of Uladh (Ulster), just before the first century of the Christian era. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part. iii. c. 46. This tribe possessed the present barony of "Upper Mas-sareene," with the parishes of "Kilwarlin and Drumbo," on the other side of the River Lagan. The exact number of churches and chapels in the territory is given in Pope Nicholas's Taxation. See Taxation of the Diocese of Down and Connor and Dromore, about the year 1291. Edited by the Rev. Wm. Reeves, M. B., 1847. Hodges and Smith.

of Blathmac. See Mac Firisigh's genealogical work, p. 510. In 1333 Blathewyc, Blawick, Blavico, were names for the then Comitatus Noræ Villæ, extending all round "Newtown-Ards," including "Bangor." Inq. post mort. Com. Ult., 1333. See also Calend. Canc. Hib., vol. i. p. 48, b. This Comitatus Novæ Villæ de Blathewyc evidently comprised the northern portion of the barony of "Ards," and the greater part of the barony of "Lower Castlereagh," in the county of Down.

^b Duibhthrian, i. e. the black third or ternal division, Anglicè "Dufferin," a barony extending along the western side of Loch Cuan (by its Norse name Strang Fiord, Anglicè "Strangford"), in the county of Down. The tribe of Mac Artain were chiefs of this and the adjoining barony of Cineal Fhaghartaigh, "Kinelarty." They descend from Caelbhadh, the brother of Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of the family of the Mac Aenghusa (Magennis).

^d Loch Cuan.—This is still the Irish name of "Strangford." See the last note but one. According to the bardic accounts, this inlet of the sea forced its way through the land in the time of Partholan, who came to Ireland 312 years after the flood according to O'Flaherty's Chronology. See Ogygia, part iii. cc. 2 and 3.

^e Arda, now called "the Ards," a barony in the east of the county of Down, lying principally between Loch Cuan and the sea. The name of this territory is translated Altitudo Utorum, in the Life of St. Comhghall, founder of Beannchor (Bangor), which is situate in this territory.

^f Leath Chathail, i. e. Cathal's half, or portion, Anglicè "Lecale," a well-known barony in the county of Down, anciently called Maigh Inis, i. e. the insular plain. The name Leath Chathail was derived from Cathal the son of Muiredhach, son of Aenghus, son of Maelcobha, son of Fiachna, who was the son of Deaman, king of Ulidia, slain in the year 627. See p. 163, note ^z, suprà.

^g Boirche.—See p. 38, note ^g, as to the mountains usually called Beanna Boirche.

i. e. the peaks of Boirche, called (according to the Dinseanchus) after Boirche, the shepherd of Ros, king of Ulster in the third century, who herded the king's cattle on these mountains. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 69. In the Dinseanchus it is stated that the shepherd Boirche could view from these mountains all the lands southwards as far as Dun Dealgan (Dundalk), and northwards as far as Dun Sobhairce. This is another proof that the present barony of "Mourne" was not the Criche Mughdhorna of the Oirghialla.

^h Cobha.—This territory is more usually called Magh Cobha, i. e. the plain of Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of the tribe called Uí Eathach Cobha, who were seated in the present baronies of "Upper and Lower Iveagh" in the county of Down. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 78. The Four Masters, and from them Colgan and others, have erred in placing this plain in Tyrone; and Dr. Lanigan has been set astray by them in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland (vol. iv. p. 11, note 26), where he conjectures that Magh Cobha was probably the name of the plain around the present village of "Coagh" in the county of Tyrone. But the situation of the plain of Magh Cobha is fixed by the older writers, who place it in Ui (Uibh) Eathach (Iveagh), and place in it the monastery of Druim Mor (Dromore) and the church of Domhnach Mor Muighe Cobha, which is unquestionably the present "Donaghmore" (in "Upper Iveagh"), nearly midway between Newry and Lough Brickland. See the Feilire Aenghus at 16th of November, and Haliday's edition of the first part of Keating's History of Ireland, p. 318, where the plain of Magh Cobha, which is said to have been cleared of wood in the reign of Irial Faidh, is placed in "Aoibh Eachach," which Haliday Anglicizes "Iveagh." See also the Annals of Tighearnach at the years 735 and 739, and Acta Sanctorum, apud Bolland. 7 Junii. The family of Mac Aenghusa (Magennises) were chiefs of this territory for many centuries before the confiscation of Ulster; but (according to O'Dubhagain) O'Gairbhith, and O h-Ainbhith (Anglicè O'Garvey, and O'Hanvey or O'Hannafey), preceded them. "Magenis" descends from Saran, chief of Dal Araidhe in St. Patrick's time, and this Saran was the eleventh in the descent from Fiacha Araidhe, and the fourth from Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of all the Ui Eathach Cobha.

ⁱ Muirtheimhne.—See page 21, note 5. This territory is more usually called Magh Muirtheimhne and Conaille Muirtheimhne, from the descendants of Conall Cearnach (of the Clanna Rudhraidhe race), the most distinguished of the heroes of the Red Branch in Ulster, who flourished here for many centuries. Colgan describes its situation as follows, in his notes on the Scholiast of Fiach's Hymn on the Life of St. Patrick :

"In Conallia Murthemnensi. Est campestris Regio Australis Ultoniæ a monte Bregh prope Pontanum ciuitatem [Drogheda] vsque in sinum maris Dun-Delganiæ, seu vt vulgus loquitur, Dun-dalchiæ vicinum; iuxta quod est campus ille in patriis historiis celebrati nominis vulgò Mag-murthemne dictus; a quo et illa Regio Murthemnensis vocatur quæ hodiè Comitatus Luthæ vulgò vocatur."—Trias Thaum. p. 8, note 16. It appears from the lives of St. Brighid (Bridget) and St. Monenna, and from the Feilire Aenghus and other calendars, that the churches of Fochard, Iniscaen, Cill Unche, and Druim Ineaschuim, were in this territory. Ussher informs us that the district of Campus Murthemene (in quo Conalcorum gens maximè

This territory had been wrested from the descendants of Conall Cearnach several centuries before the English invasion, by the Oirghialla, so that the present county of Louth, instead of being regarded as a part of Uladh or Ulidia, as it certainly was when this poem was written, has been considered as the Machaire or plain of the Oirghialla, and the part oftenest called "Oriël" or "Uriël," by English writers.

From the territories here enumerated as in Uladh (i. e. in Ulidia, or the circumscribed territory of the ancient Ulta), it is quite evident that it comprised, when this poem was written, the present counties of Louth, Down, and Antrim, except a portion of the last, which was in the possession of the Ui Tuirtre, who were a family of the Oirghialla, as already mentioned; and it looks very strange that it should not have been tributary to the king of Uladh, being on the east side of Loch n-Eathach (Lough Neagh), in the heart of his country, and separating his subjects of Dal Araidhe from those of Dal Riada, to whom he gave stipends, and from whom he received tribute.

The dominant family in this territory when it was invaded by Sir John De Courcy in 1177, was of the Dal Fiatach race. He was Cu Uladh, i. e. Canis Ultoniae, Mac Duimshleibhe (Dunlevy) O h-Eochadha, called by Giraldus Cambrensis, Dunlevus, to whose warlike character he bears the following testimony in his Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. xvi.:

"Videns autem Dunlevus se verbis minimè profecturum corrogatis vndique viribus cum 10 bellatorum millibus infra 8 dies hostes in vrbe viriliter inuadit. In hâc enim insulâ sicut et in omni natione, gens borealis magis bellica semper et truculenta reperitur."

But the greater number of his sub-chiefs were of the Clanna Rudhraidhe. Thus we see that the ancient limits of the Clanna Rudhraidhe and Dal Fiatach of Ulster were greatly restricted at the period of the English invasion by the upspringing vigor and increasing population of the race of the Collas, and the more powerful race of Niall of the Nine Hostages. Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh, in his pedigrees of the Irish families says, that the Dal Fiatachs, who were the old kings of Ulster, and blended of old with the Clanna Rudhraidhe, were hemmed into a narrow corner of the province by the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles, i. e. the Oirghialla and Ui Neill of the north, and that even this narrow corner was not left to them [he alludes to the obtusion of the O'Neills of Clanna Aedha Buidhe (Clanaboy), who subdued almost the entire of Ulidia], so that they had nearly been extinguished, except a few who had left the original territory. And, he says, grieving, "this is the case with all

⁵⁵ Magh Line.—This name (which is Anglicized “Moylinny”) is that of a level territory, lying principally in the barony of “Upper Antrim,” in the county of Antrim. According to an Inquisition taken 7 Jac. i., the territory was bounded on the south and south-east by the river Six-mile-water, on the north and north-west for two miles by the stream of Glancurry (now ḡleann a’ cōipe, Anglicè Glenwherry), as far as the mountain of Carnally; its boundary then extended southwards to Connor, and thence in a southern direction to Edenduffcarrick (now called Shane’s Castle, Lord O’Neill’s seat, near the town of Antrim), where the aforesaid river Six-mile-water discharges itself into Lough Neagh. See p. 163, note 2, suprà.

⁵⁷ Semhne.—This is otherwise called Magh Semhne, and was the name of a plain in Dal Araidhe, lying to the north of Magh Line above described. Colgan gives the following note on its situation, &c., in his notice of the church of Imleach Cluana, in his notes to the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick:

 a barony "in le Rowt." It is now included in the barony of "Upper Glenarm," which consists of the parishes of "Carncastle, Kil-last preserves the name. The present town of "Larne" was anciently called Inbhear Latharna, and in the Mac Donnell patent it is called Inver-in-Laherne. See Dubour-

Previously to the seventeenth century, Breadach was the name of a parish in the barony of "Upper Castlereagh," now incorporated with "Cnoc," under the name of Cnoc Breadaigh, "Knockbreda." In the Taxation of Pope Nicholas (circ. 1291), it is called Bradach, and its burying ground, still bearing this name, remains within Belvoir Park, the seat of Sir Robert Bateson. See the Ordnance Map of the County of Down, sheet 9. We have seen above in the note on Uí Dearca Chein, p. 161, n. 5, that Mac Giolla Muire was chief of that tribe, and it appears from the Registry of John Prene, who was Archbishop of Armagh, from 1439 to 1443, that "Patricius Pallidus O'Gilmore" was chief parishioner of "Bredac" in 1442.

or Monaigh Uladh. They were a Leinster tribe, descended from Monach, son of Oilioll Mor, son of Bracan, son of Fiac, son of Daire Barrach, son of Cathacir Mor, monarch of Ireland. They had slain their relative Eanna, the son of the king of Leinster, and fled to Eochaidh Gundat, king of Uladh, their mother's relative, and under the protection of St. Tighearnach of Cluain-Eois (Clones). Another branch of the same tribe settled at Loch Eirne, and gave name to Fir Manach (Fermanagh), a territory which they possessed anterior to the Ui h-Eignigh and Meg Uidhir. See Dubh. Mac Firbisigh's genealogical work, p. 466. The exact situation of this tribe has not been determined, but they were somewhere in the barony of Iveagh, in the county of Down. They existed down to so late a period as 1173, when, according to the Annals of the Four Masters, Mac Giolla Epscoip (Mac Gillespick), of this race, was chief of Clann Aeilabhra, and legislator of the tribe of Monach.

^w Unfree tribes, daer-chlanna.—The celebrated Irish antiquary, Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh, mentions, in the preface to his smaller genealogical work, six classes of daer-chlanna among the ancient Irish, in terms which run as follows:

The Athach Tuath, or daer-chlann before mentioned: 1. The first race of them was the remnant of the Fir Bolg themselves, together with the remnant of the Tuath De Danann 2. The second race, the people who passed from their own countries,—they being descended from saer-chlann,—who went under daer-chios (servile rent) to another tribe. 3. The third people were the race of saer-chlann, whose land was converted into fearann cloidhimh (sword-land or conquered country) in their own territory, and who remained in it, in bondage, under the power of their enemies. 4. The fourth race were people of saer-chlann, who passed into bondage for their evil deeds, and who lost their blood and their land through their evil deeds, according to the law. 5. The fifth people were those who came (descended) from stranger soldiers, i. e. from external mercenaries, who left posterity in Eire. 6. The sixth race were the people who were descended from the bondmen who came with the children of Mileadh (Milesius) into Eire.

Thus, the daer-chlanna were not always slaves, nor of ignoble descent. They were sometimes men of the chieftain's own race, but who had lost their privileges in consequence of their crimes; and very often families of best Milesian blood, who were expelled from their own native territories, and who had settled in other territories, where they were admitted on condition of rendering tributes and services not required of those who were native there. See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 84, where it is stated that the family of O'Macilfinaín (who were of noble race) were among the daer-thuatha of Ui Maine on account of their exile; and that the arch-chiefs of Ui Maine could increase the rents on all the daer-thuatha, ad libitum.

In the prose, p. 108, the correlative terms saer-thuatha and daer-thuatha occur. The relation is not fully expressed by the terms of the translation, "noble tribes" and "unfree tribes." Strictly, the tuatha were the territories, inhabited by the clanna or tribes. The saer-chlanna were tribes of equal nobility with the chieftain; their tributes and privileges were fixed, and it is about them that the book before us is principally conversant; the daer-chlanna were of the inferior castes above indicated, and were subject to arbitrary tributes.

IV.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF TEAMHAIR.

OF THE RIGHT of the king of Teamhair (Tara) here.

When the king of Teamhair is not king of Eire, he is entitled to receive a hundred swords and a hundred shields and a hundred steeds and a hundred colored dresses and a hundred coats of mail; these are from the king of Eire to the king of Teamhair.

From the king of Teamhair, too, to the kings and territories of Midhe (Meath) :

Twenty drinking-horns, twenty swords, twenty bondmen, twenty greyhounds to the king of Breagh.

Five shields, five swords and five cloaks and five steeds and five hounds to the king of Magh Locha.

Ten steeds, ten bondmen, ten women, ten drinking-horns to the king of Laeghaire.

Seven shields and seven steeds and seven bondmen and seven women and seven hounds to the king of Ardghal.

Seven steeds, seven swords, seven drinking-horns, seven cloaks to the king of Feara Ceall.

Six steeds, six swords, six shields, six bondmen to the king of Feara Tulach.

Eight shields, eight swords, eight drinking-horns, eight steeds to the king of Feara Teabhtha.

Six shields, six horses, six cloaks, six bondmen, six drinking-horns to the king of Cuirene.

Five steeds, five swords, five cloaks to the king of Ui Beccon.

Five women, five steeds, five drinking-horns, five shields to the king of Caille Fhallahein.

Eight bondmen and eight women and eight steeds and eight shields and eight swords to the king of Dealbhna Mor. Of which the gifted historical adept Benean sang :

⁹ Magh Locha.—The name of this territory is preserved in that of the parish of "Moylagh," in the barony of "Fore," or "Demifore," as it was till recently called, in East Meath; but the territory was certainly more extensive than the parish which retains the name.

territory of Fears Ceall, i. e. men of the churches, which comprised the modern baronies of "Fircall," "Ballycowan," and "Ballyboy," in the King's County. This was the most southern territory of the ancient Midhe (Meath), and is still comprised in the southern portion of the diocese of Meath. It was bounded on the south by Eile Ui Chearbhaill, which was a part of Munster. After the establishment of surnames, the dominant family in this territory took the name of O'Mael-mhuaidh, now Anglicized O'Molloy. The celebrated churches of Rathin Mochuda, Lann Elo (Lynally), Druin Cuillen, Dur-mhagh Cholain Chille (Durrow), and Rath Libhthen, are mentioned by old writers as in this territory. See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 910, 962; Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 373, n. 26; Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, 10th June.

^f Fears Tulach, i. e. the men of the hills, now the barony of "Feartullagh," in the south-east of Westmeath. After the establishment of surnames the chief family in this territory took the surname of O'Dubhlaighe (O'Dooley). They were dispossessed by the O'Maeil-eachlainns (O'Me-laghlinns) and the Anglo-Norman family of Tyrrell, and they settled in Eile Ui Chearbhaill (Ely O'Carroll), where they are still numerous. See Féilire Aenghuis, 9th January; O h-Uidhrin's topographical poem; Colgan's Acta SS. p. 135; and Mac Firsigh's pedigree of O'Maeil-eachlainn.

§ Teabhtha.—This name, also written Teathbha, Teathfa, was Latinized "Teffia." See pp. 10, 11, nn. ^u, ^x. In St. Patrick's time it was applied to a very extensive territory forming the north-west portion of the ancient Midhe (Meath). It was divided into two parts by the River Eithne (Inny), called North and South Teabhtha, the former comprising nearly all the present county of Longford, and the latter about the western half of the present county of Westmeath, namely, the districts of Calraidhe, Breagh-mhaine ("Brawney"), Cuircne (now the barony of "Kilkenny West"), besides the lands assigned to the Tuites, Petits, and Daltons, and the barony of "Kilcoursey" in the north of the King's County. But the Commaicne or Ui Fearghail (O'Farrells), gradually extended their power over the whole of North Teabhtha, and gave it their tribe-name of Anghaile, Anglicè "Annaly;" and after the English invasion various families of Anglo-Normans settled in South Teabhtha, so that the ancient Irish chieftains of the territory, namely, the Ui Catharnaigh (O'Carneys, now Foxes), were driven into a very narrow stripe of it, namely, into the present barony of "Kilcoursey," to which they gave their tribe-name of Muintir Thadhgain. See the Feilire Aenghuis at 6th February; Colgan's Trias Thaum., p. 133; O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 85; Lanigan's Ecl. History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 100; and the Miscellany of the Irish Archaeological Society, pp. 184, 185.

^h Cuircne of the Caladh, i. e. of the marshy district, the local meaning of the word caladh, "callow," along the River Sionainn (Shannon). This territory is still called in Irish Cuircneach, and comprises the entire of the present barony of "Kilkenny West," in Westmeath, and that part of the parish of Forgnuidhe (Forgney), lying on the south side of the River Eithne (Inny). After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the name of O'Tolaig, a name now, probably, unidentifiable. After the English invasion the ancient families of Cuircne were dispossessed by the Dillons. See the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 2, published by Colgan in his Trias Thaum., p. 129; D. Mac Fírbisigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 115, 308, 309, 330; O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. cc. 81, 85; and the Editor's edition of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 822, n. p. See also the Feilire Aenghuis, at 13th October, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, at 11th July, 13th October, and 18th December, from which it will appear that the churches of Disert

¹ Ui Beccon, i. e. the race of Beg-on (a man's name signifying "of little blemish"), who was seventh in descent from Eochaidh Muigh-mheadhoin, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century. See Genealogies, Tribes, and Customs of Ui Fiachrach, p. 13. This tribe is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 1066, and their territory of "Tir Beccan," at the year 1159. This territory would appear to be included in the present barony of "Ratoath," in the county of Meath, where there is a fort and parish called Rath

Beccon.

² Caille an Ollaimh, i. e. the wood of the Ollamh, or chief professor. It is more correctly called Caille Fhallambain, i. e. Fallamhan's (Fallon's) wood, in the prose anatomy of this poem. The situation of this territory appears from a note in the Feilire Aenghuis at the 14th September, and also from the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at the same day, which place in it the church of Roseach (Russagh), in the barony of "Moygoish," and county of Westmeath.

³ Dealbna, the "Delvins," scilicet, the districts so called in Meath. These were Five bondwomen befitting [him].

Entitled is the king of Dealbhna^k of poets
To eight swords, eight shields [brought] across the brine, Eight steeds with slender legs,
Eight bondmen, eight bondwomen.

That is the history of the king of Teamhair;
It is not known to every prattling bard^l;
It is not the right of a bard, but the right of a poet
To know each king and his right. . . . THE RIGHTS.

THE STIPENDS of the kings of the territories of Midhe (Meath) are as we have said.

Dealbhna Mor, now called the barony of "Delvin," in the county of Westmeath; Dealbhna Beag, now called the barony of "Demi Fore," in the same county; Dealbhna Eathra, now called the barony of "Garrycastle" in the King's Co., and Dealbhna Teannmuigh, which was a part of Teathbha, the exact situation of which has not been yet determined. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 82, and D Mac Firthsigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 57, 345. See page 105, note 9, suprà, for the tribes of this name seated in the province of Connacht. After the establishment of surnames, O'Fionnallain was the chief of Dealbhna Mor; O'Macil-challainn (Mulholland), of Dealbhna Beag; Mac Cochlain (Mac Coghlan), of Dealbhna Eathra; and O'Scolaidhe (Scully), of Dealbhna Teannmuigh, which was otherwise called Dealbhna Iarthair, or western Dealbhna. See O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, in which this last-mentioned territory is placed in the country of "Teathbha."

^l Bard.—This word, among the ancient Irish, meant an inferior poet or rhymist. The Ollamh fileadh was a man of far higher distinction.

²⁷ Conn of the Hundred Battles.—He became monarch of Ireland A. D. 177. See Ogygia, part iii. c. 70.

²⁸ Deise.—The people so called were descended from Fiacha Suighdhe, the elder brother of Conn of the Hundred Battles. They were seated in, and gave name to the territory of Deise Teanbrach, now called the barony of "Deece," in the county of

Meath. They are said to have been expelled thence by their relative Cormac, the grandson of Conn of the Hundred Battles, about the year 254, when they settled in the present county of Waterford. See page 49, note k; but it would appear from this poem that they were in Meath at the time of its composition, unless by Deise in the text we are to understand not the tribe but

The rents and the customs and the refections of the king of Teamhair from his chieftains here, as they yielded and paid them to Conn and to Cormac and to Cairbre, from whom (i. e. from whose race) they subsequently selected kings. The tribute and the payment must be the same [at all times] without any addition for increased wealthiness, without any deficiency for impoverishment, unless in case of a destruction of the tribe, or plague, or famine, or mortality,—to be levied, be it great or be it little, every year. The third of this tribute, for collecting it, belongs to the local families of Teamhair, for store and provision for them, and to be stored by them for future occasion; of which Benean said:

THE TRIBUTES of the territories of Midhe, great the narrative,
 A truly potent poet has related,
 As they are rendered to Teamhair in the east,
 From the time of Conn of the Hundred Battles^m.

Entitled is the king of Teamhair of the territories,—
 A chief who possesses [his kingdom] with a choice host,—
 To fifty oxen from the tribe of Deiseⁿ, Fifty sows, fifty young pigs.

Thirty oxen from Dal Iarthair^o, Thirty sows, which is a tribute to be talked of,
 Thirty wethers, good the store,
 To the king of Midhe of much money.

Three hundred oxen from the Dealbhna^p
 To be conveyed to Teamhair,
 Three hundred hogs, three hundred tinnēs (salted pigs),
 Three hundred wethers from the great tribe.

the territory to which they had given name, but in which a tribe of a different race were then established. There are many instances of this in Ireland, as Tir Oiliolla, in the county of Sligo, and Tir Eanna, in the county of Donegal, &c., which retained names derived from ancient proprietors, though their races either became extinct, or were supplanted by others.

^o Dal Iarthair, i. e. the Western Tribe. This name does not occur in the Irish Annals or in any other authority that the Editor has ever seen. It was evidently a name applied to a tribe in the west of Westmeath.

⁹ Luighne, also called Luaignne, and now corruptly Luibhne. This was a territory of considerable extent in Meath, and its name is still preserved in that of the small barony of "Lune," near the town of Trim, in the west of the county of East Meath; but the territory of Luighne was much more extensive than the modern barony, for we learn from the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick published by Colgan, lib. ii. c. 10, Trias Thaum., p. 130, that the church of Domhnach Mor Muighe Eachnach, "Donaghmore," near the town of "Navan," was in this territory. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Braein (O'Brien), but he is to be distinguished from O'Braein, of Breagh-mhaine (Brawny), in Westmeath, who is descended from Maine, the fourth son of the monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages; whereas O'Braein of Luighne, in Meath, is of the race of Cormac Gaileang, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, king of Manster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, cc. 69, 85. See also O'Dubhagáin's topographical poem, and Annals of the Four Masters, A. D. 1201; and p. 103, n. h, suprà.

¹ Feara Arda, i. e. the men of the heights, now the barony of "Ferrard," forming the southern portion of the county of Louth. The hills of Sliabh Breagh extend across this barony, from near "Collon" to "Clogher Head," and from this range of hills this people took their name. The territory was otherwise called Arda Cianachta. The churches of Cluain Mor and Disert Meithle Caeile are mentioned in the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, as in this territory. See Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 48, and Colgan's note in Trias Thaum., p. 177, note 90. O'Dubhagáin does not mention this territory under either name in his topographical poem, nor is it referred to in the Irish Annals after the tenth century, so that we have no means of determining the name of the principal family seated here before the English invasion. This barony, and all the region extending from Glais Neara, near Druim Inascluin (Drumiskin), in the county of Louth, to Cnocaihb Maeldoid, at the River Liffey (but not including Teamhair or Tara) were granted to Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, by king Cormac, the son of Art, after the battle of Crinna, fought A. D. 254. See Annals of

For some notices of the chiefs of this tribe of the Cianachta, see Annals of Tighearnach at the years 662, 688, 735, 742, 748, 749; and Annals of the Four Masters at the years 226, 528, 570, 732, 765, 789, 848, 849, and 918.

⁴ Saithne.—This tribe were descended from Glasradh, the second son of Cormac Gaileang, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum. They were a subsection of the Cianachta Breagh, and were seated near the sea, in the east of "Bregia," or "Fingall," to the north of Dublin. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 69, and D. Mac Firlbisigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 348, 353. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Catha-saigh, now Anglicè Casey; they were dispossessed by Sir Hugh de Lacy, who sold their lands, as we are informed by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. 24, where he states that Philippus Wigorniensis, Justiciary of Ireland, seized on the lands of "Oathesi," to the king's use, though Hugh de Lacy had formerly sold them. According to Alan's Register, fol. 21, amongst other grants, king John, when he was Earl of Morton, confirmed to Archbishop Comyn "Medietatem Decimarum Terre O'Kadesi, de Ffinegall." And in the same Register, fol. 110, is contained a charter by which John Archbishop of Dublin grants "omnes ecclesias, capellas, et decimas de totâ terrâ que fuit O'Kadesi, que in parochiâ Dublin est," to the prior and convent of Laothonia, Gloucester, and in which the following places are mentioned as in it, viz: "Ecclesia de Villâ Ogari, cum capellâ que quondam fuit Richardi Camerarii; ecclesia de Sancto Nemore [Holywood] cum capellâ que dicitur Gratas; ecclesia de Villâ Stephani de Crues cum pertinentibus suis," &c. Ecclesia de Villâ Maedun cum decimis; et Villa Willielmi Bartinet et Ecclesia de Terrâ Rogeri de Waspelle et ecclesia de Villâ Radulphi Pastons et capella Richardi Lafelde."

In D'Alton's History of the County of Dublin, p. 497, the parish "De Sancto Nemore," i. e. Holywood, is called the church of St. Nemore.

Its position is known only from the fact that the monastery of Glais Nacidhin (Glasnevin), near Dublin, was in it. Dr. Lanigan asserts that Gláis-naidhen must have been on the south side of the River Liffey, for no other reason than because Rawson, in his Introduction to the Statistical Survey of Kildare, had said or conjectured that Caëlan was bounded by the Liffey on the north; but Rawson was misled by Beauford, who forged an ancient Topography of Ireland, which was published in the eleventh number of the Col-lectanea. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, O'Leochain, Anglicè "Loughan," and Barbaricè "Duck," was chief of Gaileanga Mora, and O h-Aenghusa (Hennessy), of Gaileanga Beaga. Both were dispossessed by Sir Hugh de Lacy,

^a Testament of Cathair Mor.—This will has been noticed by O'Flaherty, Ogygia, part iii. c. 59, where he gives a short account of it, from which it appears that the document he used was different from our text; but he does not inform us where it is preserved, or whether he believed it was an authentic document. He merely remarks:

“Thus I find the will of king Cathair has been committed to writing.” The words of Cathair's will are in that peculiar metre called by the Irish poets “Rithlearg” (and “Ritairc”), an example of which occurs in the Battle of Magh Rath, p. 154, and many other examples will be found in the ancient Irish historical tale called “Forbas

V. THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF LAIGHIN, WITH THE WILL OF CATHAEIR MOR.

HERE IS THE TESTAMENT OF CATHAEIR MOR^a to his children, to his principal sons and his heirs, and he gave to each son of them a part of his patrimony and of his wealth.

And he said to Ros Failghe^b, blessing him;—

“ MY SOVEREIGNTY, my splendor,
My nobleness, my vigor,
My wealth, my strength,
My power of protection
To my fierce Ros, to my vehement Failghe,
That they may be the memorials of succession
To every one [of his race] on whom they descend,
For to him belongs to make presents,
That he is not to hoard wealth perpetually,
[But] let him give unto all fair wages;
Clement is the great and comely hero,
My vehement son, smooth-minded,
Victorious in his border-battles;
He shall contend for the plain of Teamhair,
He shall not abandon it to his relatives;

Droma Damghaire,” preserved in the Book of Lios Mor (Lismore), in the Library of the R. Irish Academy. See Introduction.

Cathair Mor was monarch of Ireland in the second century. According to the Irish genealogists he had three wives and thirty sons, but only the ten mentioned in this will had issue. See O’Fla. Ogygia, p. iii. c. 59.

^b Ros Failghe, i. e. Ros of the rings. He is the ancestor of the Ui Failghe, of whom O’Conchobhair Failghe (O’Conor Faly), and O’Diomasaigh (O’Dempsey) of Clann MacEilighra (Clanmalier), and O’Duinn (O’Dunne) of Iregan, were the most distinguished families after the establishment of surnames. ^c Daire Barrach.—He was the ancestor of the family of Mac Gorman, chief of the Ui Bairrche, for the situation of which see page 212, n. m, infra. St. Fiach of Sleibhte, now “Slatey,” in “Omargy,” is said to have been the great-grandson of this Daire Barrach, and St. Diarmad, the founder of the church of Gleann Uissen, a remarkable valley, situate two miles to the west of Carlow, was the sixth in descent from him, according to the O'Clérighs.

^d Deas Ghabhair.—According to the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 920, this was another name for Ui Ceinnsealaigh. See the Introduction.

^e Gailians.—An old name of the Laigh-nigh, or Leinstermen. See Introduction.

^f Eight bondmen.—O'Flaherty says, ubi

He will give his aid to my steadfast sons Against the attacks of their enemies;
 To the multitudinous day of judgment [is this] blessing,— Better than every man shall Failghe Ros be.”

And he gave him ten shields and ten rings and ten swords and ten drinking-horns, and he said to him,—

“NOBLEST SHALL BE thy descendants among the descendants of my children.”

Then he said to Daire Barrach^c:

“MY VALOR, my martial impetuosity
 To my fierce, vigorous Daire;
 The darling of the assembly Shall every steadfast son of the tribes of thy loins be;
 O Daire, with boldness
 Sit on the frontier of Tuath Laighean (north Leinster);
 Thou shalt harass the lands of Deas Ghabhair^d (south Leinster);
 Receive not price for thy protection;
 Thy daughters shall be blessed with fruitfulness
 If they wed; thy old father
 Cathair, the head of this province, Gives thee his benediction
 That thou shouldst be a powerful champion Over the green Gailians^e.” MY VALOR.

And he gave him, thereupon, eight bondmen^f and eight women and eight steeds and eight drinking-horns.

He said afterwards to Breasal Eineach-ghlais^g:

suprà, that before king “Cathir” fell in the battle of “Talten,” he ordered his son, “Ross Failge,” to give legacies to the rest of his sons, and to the other nobles of Leinster, and that he presented “to Daire Barry one hundred round spears, with silver blades, fifty shields in cases of gold and silver richly carved, fifty swords of a peculiar workmanship, five rings of gold ten times melted, one hundred and fifty cloaks variegated with Babylonian art, and seven military standards.”

or Ui Feineachlais, who were seated along the sea to the north of the Ui Deaghaidh, and in the present barony of Arklow, in the county of Wicklow. This tribe is incorrectly called “Ui Ineachruis,” in all the copies of O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem. The church of Inis Mocholmog belonged to this territory. See the Feilire Aenghuis, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, at 14th November.

^h Inbhear Aimherghin.—So called because this was the portion of the country which fell to the lot of Aimberghin, one of the sons of Milidh (Milesius), and the poet and judge of their expedition. This is more usually called Inbhear Mor. It was originally the estuary of the Abhainn Mhor (Avonmore), but it was afterwards, after a manner used elsewhere, applied to the town of Arklow, which, after the Danish and

 [Shall descend] from thee; afterwards shall arise
 Princes who shall destroy his last chieftainship
 For the crime of the arm of an unjust man;
 And though it shall return again,
 It shall not be a happy possession
 Because it shall be liable to oppression.”

And he gave to him six shipsⁱ and six coats of mail and six tunics and six shields and six steeds; and he gave him his own six oxen with all their appointments.

And he said to Ceatach^k:

“MY LANDS external [to my mensal lands]
 [I give] to my beloved Ceatach;
 It will be a violent destruction to thy brotherhood;
 Though thou wilt be for a time in possession of a free inheritance,
 From thee none shall be begotten.”

And he did not give his testamentary portion to him.
 Then he said to Fearghus Luascan;

“FEARGHUS, a man of purity,
 He speaks of his infantine rockings;

English invasions, became the principal fortress of Ui Eineach-ghlais. According to O'h-Uidrin's topographical poem, “O'Fiachra” was the chief of this tribe after the establishment of surnames.

ⁱ Six ships, &c.—O'Flaherty says that “Cathir” gave “Breasal Enachlas” five ships of burden, fifty bossed shields, superbly inlaid with silver and gold round the edges, five golden-hilted swords, and five chariots with their horses. This is a further proof that the document consulted by O'Flaherty was totally different from any of the copies now known to exist.

^k Ceatach.—This is probably the Ceatach after whom the barony of Ui Ceataigh (Ikeathy), in the north of Kildare, received its name. The eriocha seachtar were the lands which were not mensal, or parcel of the king's inheritance or succession.

¹ Except one, i. e. Colam mac Crimh-thainn.—It will be remarked that "Colam mac Crimthainn" is here a mere scholium. It is not in B. at all. According to the Feilire Aenghais, and the Calendar and Genealogies of the Irish Saints, compiled by the O'Clérighs, he was abbot of Tir Da Ghláis ("Terryglass," near the Shannon, in Lower Ormond, Tipperary), where his festival was celebrated on the 13th of December. The O'Clérighs remark that he was really the son of Nimídh, who was the fifth in descent from Crimhthann, the son of Cathair Mor. He should therefore have been called

I have naught to present,
 For every youth cannot be wealthy;
 But if we happen to have possession
 Of land, powerful land, hereafter,
 I am not certain but I may give leavings [a remnant]
 To the man who talks rockingly (at random)."

And he did not give anything to him.
 He said then to Criomhthann:

"CRIOMHTHANN, my boyish hero;
 He is a lock upon the blackbirds of the meadows;
 He shall conquer weak territories;
 I love not his profession of fame;
 There will not be [any of his race] worthy of veneration Except one! [who] shall prove [so].

And he gave him seven steeds^m and six drinking-horns and six matals and six oxen with their full appointments.

Aenghus Nic, too, a son that Cathacir begat in his drunkenness, by his daughter, i. e. Muchna, daughter of Cathacir, to him Cathacir said:

"NIC, there shall not be possession of free land
 With the son of hapless Muchna,
 Because of the greatness of the disgrace
 Of begetting children by relatives.
 Better is the death of a disgrace;
 Ill is the continuing of infamy."

And he did not give anything to him.
 And he said then to Eochaidh Timine:

Colam Ua Crimhthainn. He died in the year 552.

 It is not brave men from countries he will expel;

And he gave him no testamentary [share]; but he forbade him not to live with his brothers as a cogart^o (steward).

He said to Oilioll Ceadach^o, the son of Cathaeir:

“ OILIOLL, a great man in the possession
 Of old plains of old brughaidhs [farmers];
 Noble shall not be thy rath [abode];
 A man intelligent in chess playing,
 [Who shall rule] over many prosperous plains.”

And he gave his chess-board and his fithcheallacht^p (chess furniture) to Oilioll Ceadach.

Then Fiacha Ba h-Aicidh went to his father, and he was the youngest of his sons, and the father said to him:

“ I HAVE NOT AUGHT that thou couldst take with thee but my blessing and that thou abide with each of thy brethren till thou art of maturity.”

The youth Fiacha wept in the presence of his father; his father, i. e. Cathaeir, then said unto him:

“ ABIDE A MONTH with each of thy brothers, and abide seven years with Ros Failghe the son of Cathaeir. If, then, thou retain the blessing I would ensure to thee prosperity of possessions.”

And then Cathaeir said:

tribe and territory containing about the northern half of the present county of Kildare. It comprised the baronies of "Clane" and "Salt," and the greater part, if not the entire, of those of "Ikeathy" and "Oughteramny." The town of Nas (Naas), and the churches of Claeuadh (Clane), Laithreach Bruin (Laraghbrine, near "May-nooth"), Domnach mor Muighe Luadhat (Donaghmore), Cluain Conaire (Cloncurry); and Fiodh Chuillim (Feighcullen), were in it. See the Feilire Aenghuis, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 18th May, 8th June, 8th August, 2nd and 16th of September, and 27th of October. After the establishment of surnames the chiefs of this territory took that of Mac Faelain, and soon after that of O'Brain (Anglicè O'Byrne), but they were driven from this level and fertile territory, about the year 1202, by Meyler Fitz-Henry and his followers, when they retired into the mountains of Wicklow, where they acquired new settlements for themselves, and in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth they were possessed of more than the southern half of the present county of Wicklow. See the Editor's translation of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 137, note ^e, and page 246, note ^f, where authorities are quoted which prove the Uí Faelain, Anglicè "Offelan," the original country of the Uí Brain (O'Byrnes), comprised the five northern baronies of the present county of Kildare, and that it was bounded on the north by Deise Teamhrach, on the west by Uí Failghe, on the north-east by Uí Dunchada, and on the south by Uí Muireadh-

^d Forthuatha, i. e. the stranger tribe. It appears from an old life of St. Caemhghin (Kevin), quoted by Ussher in his Primordia, p. 956, and by the Bollandists, that the church of Gleann Da Loch, i. e. Vallis duorum stagnorum (Glendalough), was in this territory. This shows that it was an aliàs name for Ui Mail, as, according to a note in the Feilire Aenghuis and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 7th October, Ui Mail is the name of the territory in which Gleann Da Loch is situated. Ui Mail (Imaile) is a well-known territory in the barony of Upper Talbotstown, in the county of Wicklow, in which the family of O'Tuathail (O'Toole) settled after their expulsion from their original territory of Ui Múireadhaigh in the now county of Kildare, by the Baron Walter de Riddlesford. See the Editor's translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, page 51, n. ^c, and page 664, note ^z; also the published Inquisitions, "Lagenia," Wicklow, 6 Jac. I., 8 Car. I. Domhnall Mac Faelainn, king of Forthuatha Laighean, was slain in the battle of Cluain Tarbh (Clontarf) according to the Annals of Ulster.

^e Inbhear, i. e. of Inbhear Mor (Arklow). The territory of the Inbhear (originally the estuary merely) was the country of the Ui Eineach-ghlais, which comprised the present barony of Arklow, in the county of Wicklow. See page 196, note ^b, suprà.

¹ Ui Feilmeadha, i. e. the descendants of Feilimidh, son of Eanna Ceinnsealach, king of Leigin (Leinster) in the fourth century. There were two tribes of this name in Leinster, the one called Ui Feilmeadha Tnaidh, i. e. North Ui Feilmeadha, who were seated in the present barony of "Rathvilly," in the county of Carlow, and from whom the present town of "Tullow," in that barony, was anciently called Tulaigh O'Feilmeadha, Anglicè Tullow-Offelimy.—See Keating's History of Ireland, in the reign of Niall Naei-ghiallach. After the establishment of surnames, the chief family of this tribe took the surnames of O'h-Oncon, a name now unknown, and O'Gairbheth (Garvey). The other tribe was called Ui Feilmeadha Teas or Deas, i. e. South Ui Feilmeadha, and was seated in the present barony of "Ballaghkeen" in the east of the county of Wexford. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this tribe took that of O'Murchadha, Anglicè, formerly, "O'Murroughoe," now "Murphy," and the family multiplied so much that this is now the most numerous of all the ancient Irish tribes, not only in their own territory, still called the

"Murroughs" or "Murroes," but all over Leinster and Munster. See O h-Uidhriú's topographical poem, and the Book of Leinster, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, Hen. II. 18, fol. 247. In the year 1634, the head of the South Ui Feilmeadha was Conall O'Murchadha (son of Art, son of Domhnall Mor, son of Art, son of Tadhg). He died in this year, and was buried at Castle Ellis. He had five sons, of whom Tadhg was the eldest. There was another respectable branch of this family seated at Αβαλλ-ξορε λιαξ (Oulartleigh) in the same district, who retained their property till very recently.

² Ui Ceinnsealigh.—The people so called were the descendants of Eanna Ceinnsealach, who was the fourth in descent from Cathaeir, monarch of Ireland, and king of Leigin or Leinster, about the year 358. Their country originally comprised more than the present diocese of "Fernes," for we learn from the oldest Lives of St. Patrick, that Domhnach Mor, near Sleibhte (Sletty, Sleaty, &c.), in the present county of Carlow, was in it. In the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, quoted by Ussher (Primordia, page 863) it is Six coats of mail and six ships,

Six beautiful, bay steeds.

Vehement men of venom,

Five matals, as it is remembered.

called the larger and more powerful part of Leinster: "Ordinavit S. Patricius de gente Laginensium alium episcopum nomine Fyacha, virum religiosissimum: qui jussione beatissimi Patricii gentem Cean-selach ad fidem convertit et baptizavit."

The two clans of Ui Feilmeadhá above referred to were of this race. After the establishment of surnames the principal family of this tribe took the surname of Mac Murchadha, Anglicè "Mac Murrrough," which is now obsolete. The principal family of the race took the name of Mac Murchadha Caemhanaigh, Anglicè "Mac Murrrough Kavanagh," now always shortened to "Kavanagh," without any prefix. They descend from Domhnall Caemhanach, who, according to Giraldus, and the historical poem in Norman French on the invasion of Ireland, tempore Henry II., and a pedigree of the Kavanaghs in a MS. at Lambeth Palace, was an illegitimate son of Diarmaid, Dermotus Murchadides, (Dermod), king of Leinster, the first that brought the English into Ireland. From Eanna, another illegitimate son of this king, the family of "Kinsellaghs," now so numerous in Leinster, are descended. The other families of the race were Mac Daibhidh Mor, Anglicè Mac Davy More, or Mac Daunore, seated in the barony of "Gorey," in the north-east of the county of Wexford, who were descended from Murchadh na n-Gaedhall, the brother of Diarmaid na n-Gall, and Mac Uadog, Anglicè "Mac Vaddock," and now "Maddock," who descends from Uadog, the fourth in descent from the same Murchadh. The pedigrees of these septa are given by Dubh. Mac Fírbisigh in his genealogical work (Lord Roden's copy), p. 473, and by Cuicoirigh O'Clérigh (Peregrine O'Clery) in his genealogical compilation, now preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, p. 82, and also in a MS. in the Carew Collection in the Library at Lambeth Palace, No. 635, fol. 40, 41, et sequen.

^h Saddles, παβαλ.—We have no means of determining what kind of saddles these were. The present Irish word for saddle is ḡallaio, which seems cognate with the Welsh word dilhad, apparel. Spenser asserts, in his "View of the State of Ireland," that the Irish rode without a stirrup. It is said in the Histoire du Roy d'Angleterre Richard, recently printed in the twentieth volume of the Archæologia, with translation and notes, by the Rev. J. Webb, that Mac Murrough of Leinster was mounted upon a horse which cost four hundred cows, but without a saddle.

¹ Raeilinn.—This was the name of a remarkable fort on the hill of Mullach Raeileann, Anglicè “Mullaghreelion,” in the county of Kildare, about five miles to the south-east of Athy. This fort is called Raérend in the Leabhar Dinnseanchuis, which places it in the country of Uí Muireadhaigh, called by Cambrensis “Omurethi,” which is still the name of a deanery in the county of Kildare. By “Rígh Raileann,” in the text, is certainly meant Rígh Uí Muireadhaigh, i. e. king of “Omurethi,” a territory comprising about the southern half of the present county of Kildare, namely, the baronies of “Kilkea and Moone,” “Naragh and Rheban,” and a part of the barony of “Connell.” It was bounded on the north by the celebrated hill of Aillin (Allen), see page 202, note⁹, suprà; on the north-west by Uí Failghe, Anglicè “Offaly,” which it adjoined at the Cuirreach (Curragh) of Kildare, see page 216, note⁵, infra; and on the west by Laeighis, Anglicè “Leix,” from which it was divided by the River Bearbha, Anglicè Barrow. The deanery of “Omurethi,” which preserves the name of this territory, comprises the following parishes, according to the Liber Regalis Visitationis of 1615, viz.: “Athy, Castlereban, Kilberry, Dollardstown, Nicholastown, Tankardstown, Kilkea, Grange-Rosnolvan, Belin [Beithlinn], Castledermott, Grange, Moone, Timoling, Narragmore, Kilcullen, Usk.” And the same record adds: “Adjacent to the deanery of Omurethie is the parish church of Dame-noge [Dunamanogue] and the parish church of Fontstown.” From this the glaring error of Ledwich (Antiquities, 2nd ed. p. 294), appears, who states that the Omurethi of Giraldus was the country of the O'Moore.

Soon after the death of the celebrated Saint Lorcan O'Tuathail, Anglicè Laurence O'Toole, the family of the Uí Tuathail (O'Tooles) were driven from this level and fertile district by the great Baron Walter de Riddlesford, or Gualterus de Ridenesfordia, who, according to Giraldus (Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. 21), had his castle at “Tristerdermott,” (now “Castledermott”), in the territory of “Omurethi.” Dr. Lanigan, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. iv. p. 174, and Mr. Moore, in his History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 308, and all subsequent writers, state that Muircheartach O'Tuathail, the father of St. Lorcan O'Tuathail (Laurence O'Toole), was prince of "Imaile," but this is a great mistake; for Ui Mail (Imaile), into which the tribe of O'Tuathail migrated, had been before the English invasion the patrimonial inheritance of the family of O'Tadhg, Anglicè, formerly, O'Teige, now Tighe. Equally erroneous is the statement in the Life of "St. Laurence," published by Messingham in his Florilegium, that St. Laurence's father was king of all Leinster; for we know from the best authorities, that, though he was of the royal family of Leinster, and next in superiority of that province, he never became king of it.

¹ Fothart Osnadhaigh, now the barony of Fotharta, Anglicè "Forth," in the county of Carlow. The people called Fotharta were, according to the Irish genealogists, the descendants of Eochadh Finn Fuathart (the brother of the monarch Conn of the Hundred Battles) who, being banished from Midhe (Meath) by his nephew Art, monarch of Ireland, settled in Laighin (Leinster) where his descendants acquired considerable territories, of which the barony of "Forth," in the county of Carlow, and the better known barony of the same name in the county of Wexford, still preserve the name. The former is called Fotharta Osnadhaigh in the text, from Cill Osnadha, now corruptly "Kellistown," one of its principal churches, but more frequently "Fotharta Fea," from the plain of Magh Fea, in which this church is situate. See Book of Baile an Mhuta, fol. 77, b., and Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Oilicell Molt, where it is stated that Cill Osnadha is situate in the plain of Magh Fea, four (Irish) miles to the east of Leith-ghlinn (Leighlin), in the county of Carlow. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of Fotharta Fea, or Fotharta Osnadhaigh, took the surname of O'Nuallain, Anglicè, formerly, O'Nolan, now Nowlan, and from him this barony has been not unusually called "Forth O'Nolan." See the published Inquisitions, Lagenia, 14, 16 Car. I. Grace's Annals of Ireland, edited by the Rev. Richard Butler, p. 99, et passim. O'Flaherty states in his Ogygia, part iii. c. 64, that the posterity of Eochaidh Finn Fothart were chiefs of this territory till the death of O'Nuallan, the last proprietor, who died a short time before he was writing. The chief family of the Fotharta, in the county of Wexford, commonly called Fothart an Chairn (Carnsore point), took the name of O'Loireain, Anglicè "Larkin," but they were dispossessed shortly after the English invasion. The family is, however, still numerous in Leinster. See further as to these districts, page 221, note 5, infra.

^k Ui Drona, i. e. nepotes Dronai.— These descend from Drona, the fourth in descent from Cathair Mor. They possessed the entire of the present barony of "Idrone," in the county of Carlow, and that part of the diocese of "Kildare and Leighlin," lying on the west side of the River Barrow, near the town of "Graigue-namanagh." The church of Erard or Urard, now called "Ullard," on the west side of the Barrow, was in it. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 2nd May, 18th August, 11th October, and 8th November; and the Feilire Aenghuis, at 8th February, 29th May, 18th August, 5th September, 11th and 12th October, and 8th November. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this tribe took the surname of O'Riain, Anglicè "Ryan," and retained considerable property in this barony, till the Revolution in 1688, as appears from the published inquisitions, Lagenia, 9, 40 Car. I. They are still very numerous in this territory, and throughout Leinster, but they are to be distinguished from the family of O'Maellriain (O'Mulrians or Ryans), of Tipperary, who are of a different race, though of Leinster too. See a curious account of this family in Ryan's History of the County of Carlow, Appendix.

^m Ui Bairrche.—This tribe descended from Daire Barrach, the second son of the monarch Cathair Mor, and possessed the barony of "Slievemargy," in the Queen's County, and other tracts in that neighbourhood. They were seated between the Ui Drona and Ui Muireadhaigh; and the churches of Mughna h-Ealchaimn (Ballaglumoon), and Gleann Uissen (Killushin), near the town of Carlow, were in it. See Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp. 417, 418; and Feilire Aenghuis, at 27th February, 4th April, 8th July, 20th October; and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 8th July. O h-Uidhrin places them on the west side of the River Barrow. D. Mac Fírbisigh, in his pedigree of the Ui Bairrche (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), p. 397, states that the district extending from Ath Truistean, a ford on the river "Greece," near the hill of Mullach Maistean (Mullaghmast) six miles to the east of Athy, in the were families of the race seated at Cluain Conaire (Cloncurry), Ceall Ausaille (Kil-families at Cill ("Kill," near Naas), namely, O'Laidhgheín, O'Caíse, and O'Duibhchilin the territory of Ui Eíneach-ghlais Muighe.

 After the establishment of surnames the chief family took the name of "O'Gorman," or "Mac Gorman;" but they were driven out of their original territory, shortly after the English invasion, by the Baron Walter de Riddlesford, who became master of all the territory about Carlow. After this period they disappear from the Irish Annals for some centuries; but a curious account of their dispersion and settlement in Munster is given by Maeilín Og Mac Bruaideadha (Mac Brody), who became chief poet of Uí Breacáin and Uí Fearmaic in 1563, in a poem on their genealogy, in which he states that they possessed the territories of Crioch O m-Bairrche and Crioch O m-Buidhe in Leinster, but, being driven from thence by the English, a party of them proceeded into Ulster and another into Uaithne (Owney, in Tipperary), where they settled at a place called Doire Seinliath, where they became very numerous. In process of time, however, they removed from this territory and settled under O'Briain (O'Brien) in Uí Breacáin (Ibrickan), in the west of Tuath Mhúmhá (Thomond), where the poet states they had been supporting poets and feeding the poor for the last four hundred years.

 See O'Reilly's Irish Writers, p. 164. The name of this family is always written Mac Gorman in the Irish annals, and on all the old tombstones of the family in the county of Clare; but the late Chevalier Thomas O'Gorman, the compiler of the pedigree of Count O'Reilly, changed the prefix, because he found it O'Gormain in some poems, and all the higher branches of the family have adopted the same change.
 This family is to be distinguished from the "O'Gormans" of "Clonmacnoise," who took the surname of Mac Cuim na m-Bocht.

ⁿ Uí Buidhe.—The territory of this tribe is called Crioch O'Muighe [which is intended for Crioch Ua m-Buidhe] by O'h-Uidhrín in his topographical poem, in which it is described as on the west side of the River

Bearbha (Barrow), which divides it from Uí Muiredaigh. This helps us to fix its position; for we learn from the Life of St. "Abban" published by Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, xiii. p. 617, c. 25), that "Ceall Abbain" is in the territory of "Huamidhe," who, Colgan says in note 30, page 623, is "Huamudhe" in Codice Salmaticensi :

"Post hæc Sanctus Abbanus cum suis clericis fines Laginensium intravit, et venit in plebem Huathmarchy [Hua barchi in Cod. Sal.] et ipsa plebs honorificè receipt eum, et valdè gavisa est in ejus adventu. Et vir sanctus benedixit eam diligenter, et multis diversis languoribus ibi sanatis, et miraculis perpetratis, inde recessit in plebem Huamidhi [Huamudi in Cod. Sal.], ibique magnum monasterium construxit; et propter honorem ejus in eodem loco civitas ædificata est; et monasterium et civitas uno nomine Scoticè vocantur Ceall Abbain, quod interpretatur Latine Cella Abbani."

The annotator of the Feilire Aenghuis, at 27th October, and the O'Clérighs, in their Irish Calendar, at 16th March, place Cill Abbain in Uí Muiredaigh; but this is evidently a mistake for Uí Muighe, for we learn from O h-Uidhrin that the territories of Crioeh O'Muighe and Crioeh O m-Barrtha were on the west side of the Bearbha, and Uí Muiredaigh on the east side of the same river, which formed the boundary between them; and the old church and parish of "Killabban," are on the west side of the river, in the barony of "Bally-adams" and Queen's County. From the situation of Killabban and of Tullamoy [Շաւաօ Սամ-ծարօ], and the old church near "Timahoe," in the same county, it is quite evident that the territory of Crioeh O'm-Buidhe, or O'Muighe, is included in the present barony of Bally-adams. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Caelluidhe (now "Kealy" and "Kelly"), but this name is to be distinguished from O'Caellaigh, of which name there were two respectable families seated in the adjoining territories of Gailine and Magh Druchtain.

° The king of Gabhal, i. e. the king of the province of Laignin or Leinster.— This is still the name of a river which flowed through a wood called Fidh Gaibhle (Feegile or Figila), in the parish of Cloonsast, barony of "Coolestown," King's Co. See the Ordnance map of the King's County, sheets 19, 27, 28. In the Book of Leinster, T. C. D., H. 2, 18, fol. 112, a., is quoted a poem of St. Bearchan, the patron saint of "Cloonsast," who states that the wood derived its name from the River Gabhal, and that the river is called Gabhal from the gabhal, fork, which it forms at the junction of Chlain Sasta and Chlain Mor. The river is now called Fidh Gaibhle, though the wood has disappeared.

¶ Lacighis.—A tribe giving name to a territory in the Queen's county, descended from Lacighseach Ceann-mhor, the son of Conall Cearnach, chief of the heroes of the Craebh Ruadh, or Red Branch, in Ulster in the first century. Lughaidh Laeighseach, the son of Laeighseach Ceann-mhor, obtained this territory from the king of Laighin (Leinster), in the reign of the monarch Feidhlimidh Reachtmhar, for the assistance which he afforded in expelling the men of Munster, who had seized upon Osraidhe and all the province as far as the ford of Ath Truistean, near the hill of Mullach Maistean (Mullaghmast). See Translation of the Annals of "Clonmacnoise," by Connell Mageoghegan, and Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Feidhlimidh Reachtmhar. This territory originally comprised the present baronies of "East and West Maryborough," "Stradbally," and "Cullenagh," in the Queen's County. The churches of Disert mic Cuillinn, Cluain Eidhneach, Cill Faelain, Menedroichet Eanach Truim (now Annatrim, in Upper Ossory), Cluain Fota, and Bochlúain, were in it. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs at 2nd January, 17th February, 16th September, 3rd and 29th November; and the Feilire Aenghuis, at 2nd and 20th January, 21st February, 3rd March, 4th April, 11th, 12th, and 20th June, 23rd August, 16th Sept., 6th and 13th October, 3rd, 13th, and 20th November. And on the increasing power of the tribe they attached the territories of Crioich O m-Buidhe and Crioich O m-Bairreche, or the baronies of "Ballyadams," and "Slievemargy," so that modern Irish antiquaries have considered Laeighis ("Leix" or "Lesia") as co-extensive with the Queen's County. See

Ussher's Primordia, pp. 818, 943. This, however, is a great error, for the baronies of "Portnahinch," and "Tinnahinch," in that county, were a part of Uí Failghe (Offaly), before the reign of Philip and Mary. The barony of "Upper Ossory," except a small portion at Annatrim, near Mountrath, belonged to the ancient kingdom of Osraidhe (Ossory), and the baronies of "Ballyadams" and "Slievemargy" were not originally a part of Laeighis, but belonged to families of the race of the Leinster Irish monarch Cathair Mor. Dr. O'Conor mistakes the situation of this territory altogether. See Annales Tighernachi, p. 96, where he writes: "Lagisia sita erat ad occidentalem liffleii marginem, eratque posterioribus sæculis regio familie nobilis O'More." After the establishment of surnames the chief family of Laeighis took the surname of O'Mordha (now called O'More, Moore, &c.) from Mordha (Majesticus), the twenty-fifth in descent from Conall Cearnach, and this name is now very numerous in Leinster. Garrett Moore, Esq., of Cloghan Castle, in the King's County, is supposed to be of this race, but no evidence has been yet discovered to prove his pedigree beyond the year 1611, or to show that he is of the Irish race. James O'More, of Ballina, in the county of Kildare, who was the contemporary and correspondent of Charles O'Conor of Belanagare, was the last head of this family. He was the lineal descendant of Rudhraidhe O'Mordha (Rory or Roger O'More), of ⁹¹ Ui Criumthannan.—This territory, which was a part of Laeighis, is included in the present barony of "East Maryborough," for we learn from O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, and from the pedigrees of the seven septs of Laeighis, given in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta, and in the genealogical compilation by Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh (Marquis of Drogheda's copy, p. 221), that it extended around the fortress of Dummasc (Dunamase). According to the Feilire Aenghuis, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 12th February, the church of Teach Daimhain (Tidowan), was in this territory. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Duibh, which is probably that now anglicized to "Deevy" and "Devoy," which are still common in the district.

Fearta Mughaine, Cuil Beannchair (Coolbanagher), Cluain Sosta (Cloonstost), and Cluain-imorrois, were in this territory. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 16th January, 3rd September, and 6th and 20th October; and the Feilire Aenghus, at 29th and 31st March, 25th April, 25th June, 3rd September, 6th and 20th October, and 4th December.

After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this great tribe took the surname of O'Conchobhair, Anglicè O'Conor, from Conchobhar, the nineteenth in descent from Cathaeir Mor, and remained in great power in the territory till the reign of Philip and Mary, when they were dispossessed, after which period O'Diomasaiigh, Anglicè O'Dempsey, became the great family of the race, and remained in possession of a considerable part of Ui Failghe till the Revolution in 1688. Shortly after the English invasion the Fitzgeralds of Kildare wrested from O'Conchobhair Failghe (O'Conor Faly), and his correlatives, that portion of his original territory of Ui Failghe which is comprised in the present county of Kildare. There were then two "Offalys," formed out of the ancient Ui Failghe, namely, the "English Ophaley," in the county of Kildare, giving the title of Baron to a branch of the Fitzgeralds, and the Irish Ui Failghe, extending into the present King's and Queen's counties, and giving the Irish title of Righ Ua bh-Failghe, or king of Ui Failghe (Offaly), to O'Conchobhair Failghe (O'Conor Faly), the senior representative of Ros Failghe, the eldest son of Cathaeir Mor, monarch of Ireland in the second century.

Seven hundred cloaks from the Galls here imprimis, as a beginning of that tribute, and seven hundred tinnes and seven hundred hogs and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred oxen, seven hundred cows from the Galls too.

Two hundred milch cows and a hundred hogs and a hundred cloaks from Forthuatha Laighean.

The race of Fiacha, or the race of Ros Failghe, do not pay aught except a night's refection to the king of Laighin (Leinster), if he should go to a meeting eastwards to the Galls, or northwards to the Ui Neill, or to Munster southwards. But a hundred beeves and a hundred cows and a hundred hogs and a hundred tinnes are rendered by the unfree tribes of their lands.

Two hundred cows and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred beeves and two hundred cloaks and two hundred oxen from the seven Fotharta.

Seven hundred cows, seven hundred hogs and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred beeves from the seven Laeighse of Laighin.

Two hundred beeves and two hundred cows and two hundred cloaks from the Osraidhe.

Wood and renewing (uradh) and washing and cleansing, moreover, are due of the cocarts of the inferior grades among them. [To supply] purple and ruu and red and grey thread and white wool and blaen and bindean is due of the best of the cocarts. If they render this [it is well]; or if they neglect to do so a double proportion [is to be levied] upon them. Every third year the above tributes are paid, except the great tribute of the king of Eire as we have said above. And it was of these the gifted sage Benean sang:

HEARKEN, O Laighne of heroes,
 To the history that is not ever foolish,
 What noble tribute is due To the king of Cualann^t is to be mentioned.

Seven hundred tinnes, seven hundred hogs,
 Seven hundred oxen, seven hundred good wethers,

^c Unfree tribes.—The unfree tribes or daer-chlanna of Leinster are not mentioned by their surnames; but the people called Forthuatha Laighean, who were not all slaves, bore various surnames, which are given at full length in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta. D. Mac Firisigh traces the pedigree of their king, Domhnall Ua or Mac Fearghail, to Mesincorb, son of Cucorb, king of Leinster, in twenty-seven generations. This is the Domhnall Mac Fearghail, Righ Forthuatha Laighean, who was slain in the battle of Cluain Tarbh (Clontarf).

ḡ Fort of the foreigners.—This is intended to denote Dun Duibh-linne, the fort of the black pool (Dublin).

^b Ailpin, the son of Eolathach, of the race of Domhnall Dubh-dhamhach.—Nothing has been discovered in the authentic Irish Annals to show that there was ever such a king at Dublin. The names here mentioned are not Norse ones, and it seems quite certain that the Northmen never attempted to make any settlement in Ireland before the reign of Donnchadh, son of Domhnall, A. D. 794 (795), when, according to the Annals of Ulster, they made the first descent on the island of Reachrainn, off the north-east coast of Ireland. We learn from Irish history that Tuathal Teachtmhar, monarch of Ireland in the second century, married the daughter of Scal Balbh, king of Finland, and that Uua, Danish princess, was the mother of Conn of the Hundred Battles. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. cc. 56, 60, but no reference is made to a Norwegian colony being settled in Ireland in any other authority except this and Jocelin's Life of St. Patrick. No authority has been found in either the Scandinavian or Irish histories, annals, or sagas to suggest that they had any settlement on this part of the coast in or near Dublin before the year 836, when they entered the Boinn (Boyne) with a fleet of sixty sail, and the Life (Liffey) with another fleet of sixty sail, and plundered the plains of Magh Breagh and Magh Life, and in the same year established a colony at Ath Cliath or Dublin. Nor were they converted to Christianity till about the year 948. See Ware's works, vol. v. cap. 69, p. 60. Jocelin, in his Life of St. Patrick, states that the Irish apostle departing from the borders of Midhe (Meath), directed his steps towards Laighin (Leinster), and having passed the River Finglas, came to a certain hill almost a mile distant from Ath Cliath, and, casting his eyes

To relieve the race of the sons of Milcadh (Milesius).

He who was king of hardy Ath Cliath,
When Patrick came from the north [from Teamhair],
Was Ailpin, son of Eolathach,
Of the race of Domhnall Dubh-dhambach^h.

The day on which at Ath Cliath arrived
Patrick of Machaⁱ of great revenues,
On the same [day] cruel death had taken off
The only son of valorous Ailpin.

They brought to the descendant (son) of the Deacon round the place and the circumjacent country, he is said to have pronounced this prophecy: "Pagus iste nunc exiguus, eximius erit; divitiis et dignitate dilatabitur: nec crescere cessabit, donec in regni solium sublimetur." But this gatherer and beautifier of the popular legends respecting St. Patrick soon forgets himself (or his work has been unfairly interpolated by some modern scribes to serve a purpose), for in the next chapter but one he, in fabling language, introduces St. Patrick into the noble city of Dublin, which had been built by the Norwegians, (Norwagia et insularum populis), and which was then governed by a king, Alpinus, the son of Eochadh, from whose daughter Dublinia, forsooth, the city took its name. See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 861, 862; and Harris's History of the City of Dublin, p. 6. This is evidently the story which is said in the prose text to be taken from the Psalter of Caisel, and for which the authority of St. Banean is there alleged, but which cannot be as old as the year 836, when the Northmen first settled in Dublin. The old lives of St. Patrick state that he proceeded from Meath to Naas, which was then the residence of the kings of Leinster, and this is evidently the truth, as appears from the whole stream of Irish history. Dr. Lanigan thinks that this fable of the conversion of Ailpin, king of the Norwegians of Dublin, by St. Patrick, "was undoubtedly fabricated at Armagh," and that "either Jocelin was induced, in compliment to his patron, the Archbishop Thomas, to insert it in his book, or that it was foisted by some other hand into his MS."—Ecc. Hist. Ireland, vol. i. pp. 275, 276.

ⁱ Of Macha, i. e. of Ard Macha (Armagh).

^j Eochaidh.—This name is Irish, and denotes, eques, horseman. The Scandinavian nations had no such name. See Colgan, Trias Thaum., page 563, note 4; and Acta Sanctorum, page 114, note 3.

^m Liamhain.—This, which was otherwise called Dun Liamhna, was the name

To annoy and entrap him [i. e. the Apostle],—
To the Apostle it was a reproach.

“ If thou shouldst bring a soul into him,
O cleric pure [and] powerful,
I will submit to thee at Coill Cheanainn^k,
[And] the Galls of the green land shall submit to thee.”

They went round him thrice, right-hand-wise,
The Apostle and the high king,
So that he rose up in his life (into life)
The comely hero, the noble Eochaidh.

Hereupon the host brought to him
A screapall^l for each man, an ounce of gold,—
An ounce for each nose besides,—
And a screapall of gold for each man.

“ The three ounces which were imposed yonder of one of the palaces of the kings of Leinster. It is the present “Dunlavan,” in the west of the county of Wicklow. See Circuit of Muirheartach Mac Neill, p. 36, note 59. From this it would appear that the foreigners had possession of this place at the time of the writing of this poem. See page 203, note 8, supra.

¹⁴⁷ Its churches.—This shows that the poem was composed after the conversion of the Galls to Christianity. Ware says that the Danes were converted to the Christian faith in the reign of their king Godfrid, the son of Sitric, about the year 948; see his Antiquities, Ed. 1705, pp. 61, 62. The churches whose erection is usually ascribed to them are Mary’s Abbey, St. Andoen’s, and Christ’s Church.

¹⁴⁸ The fort, &c., i. e. Teamhair.

¹⁴⁹ My curse upon Leaghair.—Here it is evident that this particular poem was composed to flatter the Galls of Dublin by making St. Patrick pronounce a blessing on their fortress, at the same time that he pronounced a malediction against the fortress of the Irish monarchs. But there is no authority in the ancient Lives of St. Patrick, preserved in the Book of Armagh, or those published by Colgan, to show that he ever cursed Teamhair or Tara; that was reserved for Saint Ruadhan of Lothra (Rodanus of Lorha), the son of Fearghus Birn, son of Eochaidh, son of Deardubh, son of Daire Cearba, son of Oilíoll Flann-beag, son of Fiacha Muilleathan, son of Eoghan Mor, son of Oilíol

“I leave, upon them, all [these privileges, graces, or gifts],
 Gift of [being good] wives upon their female bands,
 Gift [of being good husbands] upon their fine Galls, Gift of beauty upon their damsels.

“ Gift of swimming upon the sons of their wives,
 Gift of war and success of trophies,
 Gift to their abundant houses
 Of the quick circulation of drinking-horus and drinking.

“ Gift of [good] kings for ever in hardy Ath Cliath,
 Gift of hired soldiers, gift of native soldiers,
 Gift of veneration in its churches^o,
 Gift of habitation and commerce.

“ The fort^p whence I came from the north,
 May great success not be on its kings;
 [Though] great is the fame of his valor
 My curse upon Laeghaire^q.”

It is from this [curse] that the peace of the Galls Shall not be with the king of Midhe of the great swords, Between Teamhair and Liamhain
 There shall be a battle every year^r.

Olum, king of Munster; and it is strongly to be suspected that this poem, or, at all events, the present form of the poem, was fabricated in Munster, with a view to lessen the dignity of the Nepotes Neill, by making St. Patrick curse their king and palace, while he blessed the king of the foreigners of Dublin and their city. No opportunity is lost sight of to give this great race of Niall a stain. It is probable that this poem and others, and possibly the whole work, were produced at Caiseal, during the reign of Cormac Mac Cuilean-nain, when the enmity between the races of Oilioll Olum and of Niall of the Nine Hostages was at its height; and the holy Cormac lost his life in a battle which he hazarded at Bealach Mughna, in Magh Ailbhe, with Flann Sionna, monarch of Ireland, and head of the southern Ui Neill. See the Introduction.

^r There shall be a battle.—This is a quasi prophecy introduced after the event had occurred. It looks a strange result of the (supposed) curse of Teamhair and the blessing of Ath Cliath by the Irish apostle.

this poet, who resided in Uí Ceinseallaigh, near the present town of Carlow, when the latter recommended his disciple Fiech as a person fitted to be promoted to the episcopal dignity. See Ir. Gran. by J. O'Donovan, App. II., p. 437, where the account of the meeting of Patrick and Fiech is given from the Annotations of Tireachon,

NO ONE IS ENTITLED to visitation or sale [of his poems],
 For he is not a truly learned poet
 In the use of various kinds of knowledge, Unless he knows distinctly
 The ample tributes and stipends
 That may all be rendered
 According to their various modes of distribution
 From beginning to end.
 Not entitled to visitation in any fair province
 Of the provinces of famous Banbha,
 Nor to the circuit of any chieftainry,—
 If justice be observed,—
 Is any poet who will not directly distinguish
 The advantages, the disadvantages of the dignity
 Of his poems in each territory he enters:
 When he is a learned historian,
 It is when he has read all the actions
 Of the isle of noble Eibhear^b.
 It is then he is a rock of an ollamh,
 Like a rock immoveable,
 When he comprehends the stipends
 And the tributes without doubt,
 So that he can recite them all
 In each noble meeting:
 Let him not be an old rusty vessel
 Influenced by wealth or friendship,
 For, exploded judgments should not be pronounced
 By a man of justice and mercy:
 He shall not be able to bind usages
 On the great or noble tribe,
 Unless thus he variously distinguishes—
 To his emoluments he is not entitled. NO ONE IS ENTITLED.

TEAMHAIR, THE HOUSE in which resided the son of Conn,
The seat of the heroes on Liath-druim^c,
I have in memory
Their stipends to the chieftains.

Every king who occupies strong Teamhair,
And possesses the land of Eire,
He is the noblest among all
The hosts of Banbha the fertile.

If he be a rightful king of Teamhair
It is right for the chiefs
To make each of them submission even at his house
To the just and justly-judging king.

It is due of him to acknowledge the hosts
When they come into his assembly,
It is due of them to give hostages each man
When they come to Teamhair. TEAMHAIR.

That he himself may not pass a false sentence;
That no quarrel take place in his house,
For that is the great restriction of his restrictions.

That he may not wage fierce war
With the host of the province of Conchobhar^d,

‡ Clothes of every color.—According to Keating's History of Ireland one color was used in the dress of a slave, two colors in that of a plebeian, three in that of a soldier or young lord, four in that of a brughaidh or public victualler, five in that of a lord of a tuath or cantred, and six in that of an ollamh or chief professor of any of the liberal arts, and in that of the king and queen.—See Keating's History of Ireland, Holiday's edition, p. 322. The passage is translated by Dr. Lynch as follows:

Variegated drinking-horns with their peaks,
Sets [of chessmen] with their chess-boards.

The full breadth of his face, of gold,
To the great, matchless king,
Two hundred cows and two hundred steeds,
Two hundred chariots,—no partial decision.

Twelve ships of the fleet of war
From the king of Teamhair of battles [Are] to be sent for the sons of the chieftains
Because they are acceptable presents.

Twelve lances on which there is poison,
Twelve swords with razor edges,
Twelve suits of clothes of every color⁸
For the use of the sons of the great chieftains.

A choice of courtship at Teamhair
Of princesses of highest minds [Is] to be given to him^b, but so as he selects her
If she (the princess) be unmarried.

The protection of the red-hot javelin is given To the king of many-battled Uladh; [i. e.]
If he be at Teamhair of lords
That no one dare dishonor himⁱ.

^b To be given to him, i. e. in marriage. According to the traditions at Taillte (Telltown in Meath) all the marriages which took place in the kingdom were celebrated there in Pagan times, but the contract lasted for twelve months only, at the expiration of which the parties might separate if they pleased. The Editor, however, has never been able to test the truth of this tradition by any written evidence. At the period to which this poem refers, the Christian religion prevailed in the country, and it must be considered that marriage, according to the rites and ceremonies of the ancient Irish Church, is intended by the words in the text.

ⁱ That no one dare dishonor him, i. e. that no one violate his privileges. The word γάρύξαθ is translated "dishonore" by the original compiler of the Annals of Ulster. See Pinkerton's extracts from those Annals in his Inquiry into the History of Scotland, where he remarks that this word is peculiarly Irish. For the various authorities which prove the exact meaning of the word, see the Editor's translation of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, note § under the year 1537, p. 1446. The protection of the red-hot javelin means that the king of Uladh was as untouchable as if he were a flaming sword or javelin; and, therefore, any who sought his protection were absolutely safe.

His portion in the house of Teamhair,

Wherefor he should be of great cheerfulness,

Twenty tinnex (salted pigs) for his mighty people (the Ullta).

Twenty handfuls of leeks, methinks,

Twenty eggs of gulls along with them,

Twenty baskets (hives) in which are bees,

[‡] Loch Saileach.—This is evidently intended for Loch Suileach, Anglicè "Lough Swilly," the arm of the sea running into the county of Donegal. The valley here referred to is Gleann Suilighe (Glenswilly), near Lítear Ceannaighe (Letterkenny), through which the River Suileach (Swilly) flows. See p. 23, and n. 3, ib.; the same geis occurs there, and thus Linn Saileach is identified.

The reason that these are given then

By the king of Uladh of the mighty [and] great arms,

In the bright and beautiful Loch Feabhail[‡].

Such are the hard restrictions

Of the supreme king of the province of the Red Branch[‡] ;
If he usually practise those [forbidden things],
He shall never obtain Teamhair. TEAMHAIR.

OF THE PREROGATIVES of the great king of Uladh, [viz.]

To keep his Easter at Caen-druim[‡],
His stewards [to be] at Tailte[‡] through valor,

And eight green cloaks besides,
With eight pins of findroine (carved silver).

Entitled is the king of Ui Liathainⁿ of the sea
To eight drinking-horns and eight swords
And eight good steeds [given] to him
From the king of Caiseal, without change.

Entitled is the king of the great Ui Eathach^o
To a coat of mail and a spear for combat
And to two rings of red gold
And two steeds of no bad temper.

Entitled is the king of brown Dairine^p (Dairfhine)
From the king of Caiseal of the conflicts
To eight polished swords of battle,
Eight ships and eight coats of mail.

To the king of extensive Loch Lein^a
Is due a friendly return,

^v Luinneach.—This has been for many centuries exclusively the name of the city of Limerick; but it appears from the Life of St. Carthach of Lismore, that it was originally applied to the estuary of the River Sionainn below the present city, now sometimes called "The Lower Shannon." The king of Luinneach is here put for king of Tuath Mhumha (Thomond). See the next note.

^w Tuath Mhumha, i. e. North Munster, now Anglicé Thomond. According to Keating this territory extended from Leim Chonchulainn (Loop Head; see p. 75, n. ^a) to Bealach Mor ("Ballaghmore in Upper Ossory"), and from Sliabh Echtghe (Slieve Aughty, on the frontiers of the counties of Clare and Galway, see Uí Maine, page 91, note ^k) to Sliabh Eibhlinne (now Sleibhte Fheidhlimidh, in the county of

 Even this is not an unpleasant order,
 Two shields with each ship of these,
 Two swords and two coats of mail.

There is due but only this much
 To the chief of Luimneach from Liathmhuine^x,
 This is the truth in full,—
 And the daughter of the king of Teamhair [Luachra]. . T.

ENTITLED is the king of Corca Bhaiscinn^y

Entitled is the petty-king of Corcamruadh^z
 From the king of Tuath Mhumha (Thomond) of the lordships

Tipperary). The southern boundary of this great territory is still preserved in that of the diocese of Killaloe.

^v Liathmhuine.—This is the name of a celebrated place in the parish of "Kilgullane," in the territory of Feara Muighe, (Fermoy, in the county of Cork); but it seems irregularly introduced here as a distinguishing appellative of the king of Munster, when of the line of Eoghan, commonly called the Eugenic or Desmond line. It would apply very well when the king was of the line of the Uí Caeimh (O'Keefes), of whom there was a king of Munster in 902, namely, Fionguine, son of Gorman, who died in that year.

This tripartite territory, called the Teora Tuatha, formed a deanery in the diocese of Elphin, comprising ten parishes. After the establishment of surnames the chief of this territory, who had his residence at Lissadorn, near Elphin, was O'Manchain (Monahan), but this family was dispossessed by the families of O'h-Ainlighe (O'Hanlys) and O'Birn (O'Beirnes) in the thirteenth century; see the Editor's Ann. IV. Mag. ad A. D. 1189, p. 86, n. ^d, and Miscell. Ir. Arch. Soc., p. 274.

To pay for his seat at Uisneach every seventh year, and the same is due of every province [provincial king] in Eire, in return for the Feis of Teamhair being made for the kings of Eire by the king of Teamhair; and it is there the chief sovereignty of the king of Teamhair over all Eire is reacknowledged [or renewed], and it was there they purchased their seats at Uisneach, and their recognition as kings of their provinces.

The price was a champion's ring, which used to be on the hand of each king, of gold. He used to leave it in his drinking seat when the Feis of Teamhair was consumed. And they adjudicated neither debts nor questions until another meeting at the end of seven years.

It is certain to the kings of Eire that, if they fulfil these restrictions and prerogatives, that there shall be no interruption to their reigns, and that neither pestilence nor famine, nor plague, nor strangers, shall overcome them; and that their lives shall not be short. Cuan cecinit.

NOTE.—The prose in B. only mentions teora (three) geasa of the king of Laighin, and as many of his buadha, omitting the first and second of the former and the fourth and fifth of the latter according to the order of enumeration in the poem. It omits the fourth of the buadha of the king of Connacht, which, indeed, seem to be six, both in the poem, and in the prose in L. So, the fourth of the buadha of the king of Uladh is not found in the prose in B. It calls the buadha of the monarch ceithora (four), though it mentions seven, and begins by saying that his urghartha are se (six), though it shows them also to be seven.

The order of enumeration in the prose varies much in both copies from that used in the poem; and the prose in B. differs in its order in many respects from the prose in L.

ΡΙΝΙΤ. ΑΜΕΝ. ΣΟΖΑΜ Ο ΘΡΟΜΑ ΝΟΜΙΝΕ ΣΓΡΙΔ̄ΣΙΔ̄].

THE following remarks on the style of writing observed in the two MSS. (L. and B.) which have been now the subject of comparison, may interest the critical Irish reader. They are offered in addition to what has been said at the close of the Introduction.

1st. As regards aspiration. The dot, as a mark of aspiration, is seldom used in those MSS., and even more sparingly in L. than in B., though the latter is rather the more ancient MS. The letter h, to denote aspiration, is frequently used, but its use is strictly confined to three cases, viz., ch, eh, and ph. This last is rather of rare occurrence, for the letter p itself is infrequent in the Irish language, and its aspirate of course still more so. The aspirates bh, dh, fh, gh, mh, rh, do not occur once in either MS.

The cause of this plainly was, that the school of writing in which the scribes were trained was a Latin school, in which ch, ph, and ch (following the Greek aspirates χ , ϕ , θ), alone were used; the other aspirates, bh, dh, &c., were unknown to the Greeks and Romans, and were therefore considered inadmissible by the Latin scribes.

For the same reason, in forming Latin names, Teamhair became Temoria; Laighin, Lagenia; Uladh, Ulidia; Mumha, Momonia; Breagh became Bregia; Laeghaire, Loegarius; Ruadhan, Rodanus, &c. &c. But Ard Macha preserved its form, the aspirate being already known in the Latin tongue; and Muireadhach became Muredachus, in which the aspirate dh was commuted to d, while ch was preserved.

That the habits of the Irish scribes were Latinized will further appear from an inspection of some of the contractions in common use: for instance, γ for $\alpha\upsilon\pi$, $\bar{\rho}$ for $\alpha\acute{\epsilon}\tau$, $\bar{\iota}$ for $\acute{\nu}\acute{o}$. These are obviously Latin, viz., γ et, $\bar{\rho}$ sed, $\bar{\iota}$ vel, corresponding in meaning with the three Irish particles just mentioned; and in the MSS. these Latin contractions are introduced into the body of Irish words, to express, at one time, the letters of the Irish particles, and at another the letters of the corresponding Latin particles. Thus, $\gamma\mu$ stands not for $\alpha\upsilon\pi$ μ , but $\epsilon\tau\mu$, i. e. $\epsilon\tau\mu$, between; so $\text{co}\bar{\eta}\bar{\rho}$ stands for $\text{Conna}\acute{\epsilon}\tau$, and $\text{ca}\bar{\iota}\bar{\eta}\bar{\rho}$ for $\text{cano}\bar{\iota}\bar{\eta}\bar{\rho}$. So \bar{u} is used for the Irish $\bar{u}\bar{o}\bar{p}\bar{p}\bar{o}$, corresponding with the Latin vero, which it represents.

The omission of the dot in writing, or of h in a Latin name, can seldom be taken against other evidence as proof that aspiration was not used. The constant use of ch and ch in these MSS., and the occasional use of the dot, determine the usage of the language at the time; and it will be found that the habit and rules of the language, as regards aspiration in speaking, have varied in little or nothing from the fourteenth century to the present time.

In editing Leabhar na g-Ceart, the omitted dot has been generally supplied, but not over initial capital letters, for the use of the dot over capitals is inconvenient in printing; but where, in the case of a capital letter, aspiration is connected with the construction of the language, as when used between one part of speech and another, to mark their mutual dependence, an h has been inserted, but always in a parenthesis (h), as it was determined to print the text without the addition of a letter; as in \acute{o} $\text{M}(h)\mu\bar{\rho}\bar{\rho}\bar{\alpha}\bar{\delta}\bar{\iota}\bar{\nu}$, $\alpha\bar{\rho}$ $\text{S}(h)\alpha\bar{\iota}\bar{\mu}\bar{\alpha}\bar{\iota}\bar{o}$, $\text{do-m}^?$

Θ(h)αιπε, α Θ(h)αιπε. In similar situations, after C and Τ the text already possessed the h, as ó Chiaρραιóιβ, ιερ Θεμαιρ ιρ Ζια-μιαν. But when there was no such government the parenthetical (h) has not been inserted, as Θεαρ Γαβαιρ for Deas Ghabhair. The dot found in the MSS. has in some cases been preserved over the initial capital, as ó Ψεαραιβ Αριδα, p. 186; οο ριλ Ψιαχach, p. 204; οο ριξ Ψορchuath, p. 206.

Secondly, as regards eclipsing. We find that the proper eclipsis has, with almost perfect regularity, been inserted in three cases, viz., before b, d, and g, i. e. by mb, nd, and ng; or, as we have printed them, m-b, n-d, and n-g; also in the corresponding prefixing of n before vowels in similar situations, as n-a; thus, ρεαέτ m-βριιτ, οέτ n-δαμ, ναε n-γαβρα, δειέ n-ειέ.

In the cases, however, of words of eclipsing power occurring before the consonants c, f, p, t, eclipsis is never used in these MSS.

Now this occurs, not because the eclipsing sound was not adopted in these cases, just as much as in those we had just noticed, but from quite a different cause. It will at once be seen that the consonants c, f, p, t, are those in which, in the succeeding century, the act of eclipsing was designated by a simple reduplication of the consonant, viz., by cc, ff, pp, tt; and there is no more doubt that the single letters in our text, in the eclipsed situations, were sounded exactly as they are now pronounced, than that those redoubled letters were so expressed: and thus, ρεαχτ claióim, ochτ φαλξι, in the fourteenth century; ρεαέτ cclaióim, οέτ ffάλξι, in the sixteenth century; and ρεαέτ g-claióim, οέτ b-φάλγε, in the eighteenth century, are the same.

The parenthesis has also been used to exhibit this eclipsis to the reader, and the text appears thus: ρεαέτ (g)-claióim, οέτ (b)-φάλξι.

Thirdly, as regards the accent, or mark of long quantity. The adoption of this improvement, which enables the reader at once to enjoy his text by being informed how the best scholars of the age consider that it ought to be expressed, stood free of all difficulty. Not a single accent is discoverable in the entire text, either in B. or L., and therefore no disadvantage could here arise from the adoption of the accent.

Fourthly, as regards the use of the vowels and consonants in these Manuscripts.

The diphthong ao, or triphthong aoi, never once occurs in the entire work; æ is the form generally used, occasionally œ; therefore, Ζαεῖταιρε, and sometimes Ζοεῖταιρε, never Ζαιοῖταιρε. The æ is used as a broad diphthong, though ending in a slender vowel, and no confusion results from the use of it. Instead of αοι, αει occurs several times; very often αι in which the ι is long, and it is accented αί in this edition, as in Καθαίρη, θαίρη, ραίρη.

The diphthong eu never once occurs. It was subsequently invented as a substitute for έα, and very uselessly, as the use of the accent was preferable to a change in orthography.

The modern diphthongs io and io never once occur. The simple vowel ι is used, and the reader is supposed to understand that it ends broad. Thus we have ριλ, not ριολ; Κρίρη, not Κριόρη; ρίρ, cíρ, cíραιβ, τρíchαι, not ρίρη, cíρη, έίρηαιβ, τρíchαι, &c., in such words there was little or no occasion ever to have introduced the “ο.” In words whose terminations take the slender inflexion, it might, indeed, be said that the distinction afforded between io (broad) and ι (slender) is an advantage, as if the Nom. be made Καίριολ, and Gen. Καίριλ; or Gen. Είριονη and Dat. Είρινη. But in such cases a much better rule would have been to have adhered steadily to the Gen. Είρειανη and Nom. Καίρειαι, and to have reserved the Είρινη and Καίριλ for the slender terminations. The form Είρειανη (Είρειανη, Είρειανη) occurs oftenest, but it must be admitted that Είρινη, Είρινη, &c., in the Gen. also are often found here.

The simple e for the diphthong ea, terminating broad, occurs very often; but on the whole it appears, that at the date of these MSS., the use of ea was decidedly prevalent, and a great advantage was gained thereby, for whether the ea (unaccented) έα (e accented) or εά (u accented) be intended, the α always governs or influences the sound.

In the same way the simple e is often used where ει is used at other times, as Ειε for Ειιε, Ερε for Ειρε, εε for ειε, δεη for οειη, ρεεη for ρεειη.

A final ι occurs frequently for a final e, as Μυρρηαιδι for Μυρρηαιδε.

There are various words in which irregular vowels are found, as ταραρηετα for ταραρηετα; so ζυ (B.) for ζο.

With respect to consonants there is a very general use of the primary (spirate) mute (c) for the medial (vocal) letter (ç) of the same organ; as acur (in L.) for acur (which occurs in B.); co for co, céar for céar, cóic for cúig, cach for gach, ic for ag, tauóe for tauóe, and caippe for caippe.

There is a good deal of looseness in the use of z (i. e. z) for o (i. e. o), and vice versa, especially in the ends of words and between vowels, as Team paó for Teampaiḡ, loḡe for luíde, &c.

The use of the nn is frequent, but the no in place of it is still more so. There is a circumstance observable in these MSS., proving, as is generally known, that the o in the no was not pronounced, viz., that in a great many instances the o is dotted, thus, no, as may be seen above at pp. 279, 280, &c.

W. E. H.

CORRIGENDA.

THE words leabur na c-Cearc in p. 28, l. 1, should have been printed na (z)-Cearc. The MS. B. does not contain the second c.

The whole passage in B., referred to by Nos. 147, 148, to p. 230 (see Various Readings, p. 287), runs as follows:

Facbaim fop an Aḡ uile,—b. m-ban fop a ban-cúipe,—

b. ap [a] gallab glana,—b. n-aile ap a nḡeana,—

ḡ. rnaia ap macaib a m-ban,—b. ceḡao ip b. compaia,—

b. dia óaltaib gona,—im luao copn ip comola.

It appears by the fourth and seventh lines that the possessive pronoun here intended is the masculine singular; although there is a change to the plural in the fifth line, just as the plural runs through the text in L. Consequently Aḡ, the Ford, is referred to, and the division of letters into words in the first line of the text in B. is correct, and the translation should run as follows:

I leave upon the whole Ford,—

Gift of being good wives upon ITS female bands, Gift, &c.

Some omissions to insert the necessary marks of aspiration, eclipsis, and long quantity, in the Irish text, have taken place, particularly in pp. 28, 30, 32, which went to press before the rules to be observed were settled so fully as subsequently they were; and even in the succeeding pages an attentive observer will detect, occasionally, omissions of the proper marks, which it is hoped the indulgent reader will excuse; for it is indeed difficult altogether to avoid error in such matters, although there can be no doubt that, with aid so eminent as has been enlisted in the present publication,—Mr. Curry transcribing the MS. for the printer,—and Mr. O'Donovan superintending its progress through the press,—the highest perfection of accurate editing of the Irish text is attainable. But the rules to be ultimately adopted should be thoroughly understood beforehand. In the present case the whole MS. was transcribed in the same manner as that from which the text of the ḡearc, &c. (pp. 2-24) was printed; and many of the typographic niceties afterwards adopted, were only gradually developed and systematized in the progress of the work through the printer's hands.

This day is published, in three thick Volumes, 4to., pp. 2500,

THE ANNALS OF IRELAND,

FROM THE ORIGINAL OF THE FOUR MASTERS,

CONSISTING OF

THE IRISH TEXT,

AND

WITH COPIOUS EXPLANATORY NOTES,

BY

JOHN O'DONOVAN, ESQ., M.R.I.A.

THE work here presented to the Public may with propriety be designated a continuation of those Annals of which the earlier portion was published at the expense of the late Duke of Buckingham, A. D. 1826, in the Collection of ancient Irish Histories, edited by Dr. O'Connor, and entitled "Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores Veteres."

The Duke of Buckingham's publication has long been recognised as the most important contribution which has been made to the Irish historical library since the time of Sir James Ware; and no student would be considered qualified to investigate any question of civil or ecclesiastical antiquity connected with this country who had not diligently perused it. But the Annals therein contained come down no farther than the end of the twelfth century, leaving all the subsequent events of the Anglo-Irish period untouched; events of much greater consequence to the present generation than those embraced in the earlier portion, and which, in the Annals of the Four Masters particularly, are treated of with much greater copiousness, occupying at least three-fourths of the entire compilation, viz., from A. D. 1172 to A. D. 1616. In order to complete this important publication, the Publishers, so far back as 1833, entered into arrangements with Mr. O'Donovan, the eminent Irish scholar and antiquary, to undertake an English translation of the unpublished text of the Four Masters, with topographical and genealogical annotations, suitable to the high character of the work and to his own great reputation in these departments of learning. The extended character of the collateral researches, collations, and historical proofs, which Mr. O'Donovan has deemed necessary to the due execution of the work, has delayed the period of publication considerably beyond the time the Publishers originally intended, as it has also made the work itself more copious and valuable than even the most sanguine expectations of their subscribers could have expected.

It may be proper here to state, that the Annals in question are those which were compiled by the O'Clerys, the hereditary annalists of the family of O'Donnell, after the downfall of that powerful sept, on the Plantation of Ulster. The originals, from which the compilation was made, are now, to a great extent, lost or destroyed; and this work of the Four Masters, as the chroniclers who were principally engaged in it are designated, remains, in a vast number of particulars, the only existing record from which the facts of Irish mediæval history can be derived. It was the apprehension of the probable loss of these materials that formed one of the chief inducements to the Four Masters themselves to undertake their task, which they finished in the year 1636, in the monastery of Donegal, under the patronage (their own hereditary protectors being dispersed) of O'Gara of Coolavin. The motives leading to the compilation are set forth with great simplicity and dignity by Michael O'Clery, the senior of the annalists, in the dedication of the work to O'Gara.

"In every country enlightened by civilization, and confirmed therein through a succession of ages, it has been customary to record the events produced by time. For sundry reasons, nothing was deemed more profitable or honourable than to peruse and study the works of ancient writers, who gave a faithful account of the great men who figured on the stage of life in preceding ages, that posterity might be informed how their forefathers employed their time, how long they continued in power, and how they have finished their days. I, Michael O'Clery, have waited on you, noble Fergal O'Gara, as I was well acquainted with your zeal for the glory of God and the credit of your country. I perceived the anxiety you suffer from the cloud which at present hangs over our ancient Milesian race; a state of things which has occasioned the ignorance of many relative to the lives of the holy men, who, in former times, have been the ornaments of our island; the general ignorance also of our civil history, and of the monarchs, provincial kings, lords, and chieftains, who flourished in this country through a succession of ages; with equal want of knowledge in the synchronism necessary for throwing light on the transactions of each. In your uneasiness on this subject, I have informed you that I entertained hopes of joining to my own labours the assistance of the antiquaries I held most in esteem, for compiling a body of Annals, wherein those matters should be digested under their proper heads; judging that should such a compilation be neglected at present, or consigned to a future time, a risk might be run that the materials for it should never again be brought together. In this idea, I have, at considerable difficulty, collected the most authentic Annals I could find in my travels through this kingdom. Such as I have obtained, are arranged in a continued series; and I commit them to the world under your name, noble O'Gara, who stood forward in patronizing this undertaking: you it was who set the antiquarians at work, and most liberally paid them for their labour in arranging and transcribing the documents before them in the convent of Donagall, where the Fathers of that house supplied them with the necessary refreshments. In truth, every benefit derivable from our labours is due to your protection and bounty, O Fergall son of Teig, son of Oileall, son of Dermot," &c.

Of the work so produced there appear to have been four transcripts, all of which, in whole or in part, have come down to the present day; and it is from a collation of these that the text of the present publication has been printed. In order to secure exactness of translation, all the known accessible translations of Irish Annals, into the English and Latin languages, from the sixteenth century down to the present time, have been compared, and digested into vocabularies, and the peculiar meaning of each phrase in its historical sense fixed and authenticated. The necessity for these precautions will appear from the following observations on this subject of the venerable Dr. Charles O'Conor :

“ I approve greatly of your intention to get our Annals of the Four Masters, &c., translated. But if not undertaken by a man who has a critical knowledge of the phraseology, with the changes made therein from the sixth to the tenth century, the sense will be frequently mistaken, and a bad translation, in such a case, will be worse than none at all. Even a publication of the Irish text would require the collation of the different manuscripts for restoring the original reading, and correcting the blunders of ignorant transcribers.”—Letter to the Chevalier O'Gorman, May 31, 1783.

And again :

“ But the worst out is, I doubt that you have a man in France or Ireland who could decipher the contractions. In my province of Connaught I know of none (I am sure there is none), myself excepted, who can read these Annals, or explain many of the terms, though they could read them. In the margins of these Annals you will find several notes of mine, and I would caution you against their being transcribed, lest they should be mistaken for any part of the original.”—Letter to the Chevalier O'Gorman, Sep. 14, 1783.

While this care has been taken to secure perfect accuracy in the text and translation, all the accessible depositories of information here and in Great Britain have been made tributary to the topographical, genealogical, and general illustration of the subject; and the Publishers feel themselves warranted in stating, that so exact and copious a history of the places, families, and descents of an entire kingdom, through a period of 500 years, has never before been published in any one work in the British islands.

In presenting so great a contribution to the literature of their age, the Publishers cannot but advert to the happy progress which this country has lately made in the grave and noble pursuits of historical learning, and to the growing appreciation amongst all classes of the authenticity and value of our native annals, genealogies, and historical records. The opinions which so long consigned these evidences of past times to contempt and oblivion are no longer entertained in any seat of learning or of liberal knowledge. It is now generally acknowledged that influences, originating in the peculiar institutions and manners of the early Irish, continue in active operation amongst the mass of the present population; and that it is as desirable for the practical statesman or legislator, as for the philosophic historian or moralist, to be acquainted with the nature and effect of such agencies. It is also felt that the sentiment of attachment to the country, so essential for the union and safety of society, is greatly strengthened by local associations, and by identifying known places with past events. In this latter point of view the present publication possesses extraordinary claims on the attention of all parties interested in the soil ; inasmuch as there is no locality of any note in Ireland which is not ascertained by its ancient name, and associated with its proper series of events, by the unexampled topographical labours of the Editor.

To the general scholar the work will recommend itself, as a record of the acts and fortunes of a peculiar people, the last representatives of that great European family, which has elsewhere given way before the more vigorous institutions of Roman and feudal civilization ; but still survives here, and constitutes a large and influential section of one of the most powerful nations of the world. In the style and arrangement of the Annals will be found, in the midst of many imperfections, a touching simplicity and singular distinctness of narration, united with a high degree of historic candour ; and, as affording a new insight into the habits of thought and feeling of a people so long regarded with interest and curiosity by the rest of the world, it is not, perhaps, too much to expect that the work will commend itself to the general notice of the philosophic scholars and statesmen of Europe and America.

With regard to minor details, the work has been printed at the University Press of Dublin ; the type for the Irish text, which is interpagged with the English translation, was specially designed for the Publishers, from the best manuscript examples. The matrices were executed under the care of the Editor, Dr. Petrie, and Mr. Eugene Curry, whose names will be recognised as sufficient guarantee for accuracy. The contractions in the original are reduced to the ordinary orthography, so as to render the Irish portion easy to be read by any one desirous of studying that language in its purity ; and the size of the work is uniform with the "Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores Veteres," so that those who are fortunate enough to possess copies of the latter rare and costly publication, can command a complete and uniform set of Annals, from the earliest historic period to A. D. 1616.
